CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 7, 1896.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.
The VICE-PRESIDENT of the United States (Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, of the State of Illinois) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose eyes are upon Thy people and whose ears are open unto their prayer, most heartily we thank Thee that since last we met in this place the angel of death has touched no man whose seat is upon the floor. We bless Thee that so many of the members of the Senate are here again, in health and strength, ready for their responsible and arduous labors. Guard them during the session, and their households, from harm and evil of every kind. Guide them in their counsels, and bring them to the best and harniest result.

Most humbly and earnestly we pray that Thy blessing may rest upon Thine honored servant, our beloved friend, the senior Senator from Iowa. Restore him to perfect health and soundness, and bring him speedily to his seat upon this floor in his accustomed power.

We offer to Thee our hearty thanksgivings, O God, the Ruler of the world and the affairs of men, that after an energetic and exciting canvass, free from much of the personal rancor, vituperation, and scandal mongering of earlier years, the land is quiet and at rest, accepting the ballot of the nation and returning into ways of orderly living.

We pray, O Lord, that Thy blessing may rest upon all our people. Keep us in peace with all nations. Prosper us in our industries, and grant that all sorts and conditions of men, our rulers and their constituents, the farmers and merchants, the owners of mills and mines, the captains of industry, the workmen, the conductors and the writers for the press, the teachers and the students in our institutions, the white and the black, the native born and the adopted, may be knitted more and more closely together in the grand brotherhood of American citizenship.

May the flame of patriotism burn more brightly and gloriously in the breast of the nation, and may we rise by Thy guidance and support to higher levels of civilization, and own ourselves the subjects of Him, the first begotten from the dead, the Prince of the kings of the earth, in whose hallowed name we humbly pray.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the Vice-President The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read. The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As representatives of the people in the legislative branch of their Government, you have assembled at a time when the strength and excellence of our free institutions and the fitness of our citizens to enjoy popular rule have been again made manifest. A political contest involving momentous consequences, fraught with feverish apprehension, and creating aggressiveness so intense as to approach bitterness and passion, has been waged throughout our land, and determined by the decree of free and independent suffrage, with-out disturbance of our tranquillity or the least sign of weakness in our national structure.

When we consider these incidents and contemplate the peaceful obedience and manly submission which have succeeded a heated clash of political opinions, we discover abundant evidence of a determination on the part of our countrymen to abide by every verdict of the popular will, and to be controlled at all times by an abiding faith in the agencies established for the direction of the affairs of their Government.

Thus our people exhibit a patriotic disposition which entitles them to demand of those who undertake to make and execute their laws such faithful and unselfish service in their behalf as can only be prompted by a serious appreciation of the trust and confidence which the acceptance of public duty invites.

In obedience to a constitutional requirement, I herein submit to the Congress certain information concerning national affairs, with the suggestion of such legislation as in my judgment is necessary and expedient. To secure brevity and avoid tiresome narration, I shall omit many details concerning matters within federal control, which, though by no means unimportant, are more profitably discussed in departmental reports. I shall also further curtail this communication by omitting a minute recital of many minor incidents connected with our foreign relations which have heretofore found a place in Executive messages, but are now contained in a report of the Secretary of State, which is hopewith submitted. herewith submitted.

At the outset of a reference to the more important matters affecting our relations with foreign powers, it would afford me satisfaction if I could assure the Congress that the disturbed condition in Asiatic Turkey had during the past year assumed a less hideous and bloody aspect, and that either as a consequence of the awakening of the Turkish Government to the demands of humane civilization, or as the result of decisive action on the part of the great nations having the right by treaty to interfere for the protection of those exposed to the rage of mad bigotry and cruel fanaticism, the shocking features of the situation had been mitigated. Instead, however, of welcoming a softened disposition or protective intervention, we have been afflicted by continued and not unfrequent reports of the wanton destruction of homes and the bloody butchery of men, women, and children, made martyrs to their profession of Christian faith.

While none of our citizens in Turkey have thus far been killed or wounded, though often in the midst of dreadful scenes of danger, their safety in the future is by no means assured. ernment at home and our minister at Constantinople have left nothing undone to protect our missionaries in Ottoman territory, who constitute nearly all the individuals residing there who have a right to claim our protection on the score of American citizen-ship. Our efforts in this direction will not be relaxed; but the deep feeling and sympathy that have been aroused among our people ought not to so far blind their reason and judgment as to lead them to demand impossible things. The outbreaks of blind fury which lead to murder and pillage in Turkey occur suddenly and without notice, and an attempt on our part to force such a hostile presence there as might be effective for prevention or protection would not only be resisted by the Ottoman Government, but would be regarded as an interruption of their plans by the great nations who assert their exclusive right to intervene in their own time and method for the security of life and property in Turkey.

Several naval vessels are stationed in the Mediterranean as a measure of caution and to furnish all possible relief and refuge in ase of emergency we have made claims against the Turkish Government for the pillage and destruction of missionary property at Harpoot and Marash during uprisings at those places. Thus far the validity of these demands has not been admitted, though our minister, prior to such outrages and in anticipation of danger, demanded protecto such outrages and in anticipation of danger, demanded proce-tion for the persons and property of our missionary citizens in the localities mentioned, and notwithstanding that strong evidence exists of actual complicity of Turkish soldiers in the work of destruction and robbery.

The facts as they now appear do not permit us to doubt the jus-tice of these claims, and nothing will be omitted to bring about their prompt settlement. A number of Armenian refugees having arrived at our ports, an order has lately been obtained from the Turkish Government permitting the wives and children of such refugees to join them here. It is hoped that hereafter no obstacle will be interposed to prevent the escape of all those who seek to avoid the perils which threaten them in Turkish dominOur recently appointed consul to Erzerum is at his post and discharging the duties of his office, though for some unaccountable reason his formal exequatur from the Sultan has not been issued.

I do not believe that the present somber prospect in Turkey will be long permitted to offend the sight of Christendom. It so mars be long permitted to offend the sight of Christendom. It so mars the humane and enlightened civilization that belongs to the close of the nineteenth century that it seems hardly possible that the earnest demand of good people throughout the Christian world for its corrective treatment will remain unanswered.

The insurrection in Cuba still continues with all its perplexities. It is difficult to perceive that any progress has thus far been made toward the pacification of the island or that the situation of affairs as depicted in my last annual message has in the least improved. If Spain still holds Habana and the seaports and all the considerable towns, the insurgents still roam at will over at least two-thirds of the inland country. If the determination of Spain to put down the insurrection seems but to strengthen with the lapse of time, and is evinced by her unhesitating devotion of largely increased military and naval forces to the task, there is much reason to believe that the insurgents have gained in point of numbers, and character, and resources, and are none the less inflexible in their resolve not to succumb, without practically securing the great objects for which they took up arms. If Spain has not yet reestablished her authority, neither have the insurgents yet made good their title to be regarded as an independent state. Indeed, as the contest has gone on, the pretense that civil government exists on the island, except so far as Spain is able to maintain it, has been practically abandoned. Spain does keep on foot such a government, more or less imperfectly, in the large towns and their immediate suburbs. But, that exception being made, the entire country is either given over to anarchy or is subject to the military occupation of one or the other party. It is reported, indeed, on reliable authority that, at the demand of the commander in chief of the insurgent army, the putative Cuban government has now given up all attempt to exercise its functions, leaving that government confessedly (what there is the best reason for supposing it always to have been in fact) a government merely

Were the Spanish armies able to meet their antagonists in the open, or in pitched battle, prompt and decisive results might be looked for, and the immense superiority of the Spanish forces in numbers, discipline, and equipment could hardly fail to tell' greatly to their advantage. But they are called upon to face a foe that shuns general engagements, that can choose and does choose its own ground, that from the nature of the country is visible or invisible at pleasure, and that fights only from ambuscade and when all the advantages of position and numbers are on its side. In a country where all that is indispensable to life in the way of food, clothing, and shelter is so easily obtainable, especially by those born and bred on the soil, it is obvious that there is hardly a limit to the time during which hostilities of this sort may be prolonged.

Meanwhile, as in all cases of protracted civil strife, the passions of the combatants grow more and more inflamed and excesses on both sides become more frequent and more deplorable. also participated in by bands of marauders, who, now in the name of one party and now in the name of the other, as may best suit the occasion, harry the country at will and plunder its wretched the occasion, harry the country at will and plunder its wretched inhabitants for their own advantage. Such a condition of things would inevitably entail immense destruction of property even if it were the policy of both parties to prevent it as far as practicable. But while such seemed to be the original policy of the Spanish Government, it has now apparently abandoned it and is acting upon the same theory as the insurgents, namely, that the exigencies of the contest require the wholesale annihilation of property, that it may not prove of use and advantage to the great. that it may not prove of use and advantage to the enemy

It is to the same end that in pursuance of general Spanish garrisons are now being withdrawn from plantations and the rural population required to concentrate itself in the towns. The sure result would seem to be that the industrial value of the island is fast diminishing, and that unless there is a speedy and radical change in existing conditions it will soon disappear altogether. That value consists very largely, of course, in its capacity to produce sugar—a capacity already much reduced by the interruptions to tillage which have taken place during the It is reliably asserted that should these interruptions continue during the current year and practically extend, as is now threatened, to the entire sugar-producing territory of the island, so much time and so much money will be required to restore the land to its normal productiveness that it is extremely doubtful if capital can be induced to even make the attempt.

The spectacle of the utter ruin of an adjoining country, by nature one of the most fertile and charming on the globe, would engage the serious attention of the Government and people of the United States in any circumstances. In point of fact, they have a concern with it which is by no means of a wholly sentimental or philanthropic character. It lies so near to us as to be hardly separated from our territory. Our actual pecuniary interest in it is second only to that of the people and Government of Spain. It is reasonably estimated that at least from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 of American capital are invested in plantations and in railroad, mining, and other business enterprises on the island. The vol-ume of trade between the United States and Cuba, which in 1889 amounted to about $64,000,000, rose in 1893 to about $103,000,000, and in 1894, the year before the present insurrection broke out, amounted to nearly $96,000,000. Besides this large pecuniary stake in the fortunes of Cuba, the United States finds itself inextricably involved in the present contest in other ways both vexatious and costly.

Many Cubans reside in this country and indirectly promote the insurrection through the press, by public meetings, by the purchase and shipment of arms, by the raising of funds, and by other means, which the spirit of our institutions and the tenor of our laws do not permit to be made the subject of criminal prosecutions. Some of them, though Cubans at heart and in all their feelings and interests, have taken out papers as naturalized citizens of the United States, a proceeding resorted to with a view to possible protection by this Government, and not unnaturally regarded with much indignation by the country of their origin. The insurgents are undoubtedly encouraged and supported by the widespread sympathy the people of this country always and instinctively feel for every struggle for better and freer government, and which, in the case of the more adventurous and restless elements of our population, leads in only too many instances to active and personal par-ticipation in the contest. The result is that this Government is constantly called upon to protect American citizens, to claim damages for injuries to persons and property, now estimated at many millions of dollars, and to ask explanations and apologies for the acts of Spanish officials, whose zeal for the repression of rebellion sometimes blinds them to the immunities belonging to the unof-fending citizens of a friendly power. It follows from the same causes that the United States is compelled to actively police a long line of seacoast against unlawful expeditions, the escape of which the utmost vigilance will not always suffice to prevent.

These inevitable entanglements of the United States with the rebellion in Cuba, the large American property interests affected, and considerations of philanthropy and humanity in general, have led to a vehement demand in various quarters for some sort of positive intervention on the part of the United States. It was at first proposed that belligerent rights should be accorded to the insurgents—a proposition no longer urged because untimely and in practical operation clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests. It has since been and is now sometimes contended that the independence of the insurgents should be recognized. the independence of the insurgents should be recognized. But imperfect and restricted as the Spanish government of the island may be, no other exists there—unless the will of the military officer in temporary command of a particular district can be dignified as a species of government. It is now also suggested that the United States should buy the island—a suggestion possibly worthy of consideration if there were any evidence of a desire or willingness on the part of Spain to entertain such a proposal. is urged, finally, that, all other methods failing, the existing internecine strife in Cuba should be terminated by our intervention, even at the cost of a war between the United States and Spain—a war which its advocates confidently prophesy could be neither large in its proportions nor doubtful in its issue.

The correctness of this forecast need be neither affirmed nor denied. The United States has nevertheless a character to maintain as a nation, which plainly dictates that right and not might should be the rule of its conduct. Further, though the United States is not a nation to which peace is a necessity, it is in truth the most pacific of powers, and desires nothing so much as to live in amity with all the world. Its own ample and diversified domains satisfy all possible longings for territory, preclude all dreams of conquest, and prevent any casting of covetous eyes upon neighboring regions, however attractive. That our conduct neighboring regions, however attractive. That our conduct toward Spain and her dominions has constituted no exception to this national disposition is made manifest by the course of our Government, not only thus far during the present insurrection, but during the ten years that followed the rising at Yara in 1868. No other great power, it may safely be said, under circumstances of similar perplexity, would have manifested the same restraint and the same patient endurance. It may also be said that this persistent attitude of the United States toward Spain in connection with Cuba unquestionably evinces no slight respect and regard for Spain on the part of the American people. They in truth do not forget her connection with the discovery of the Western Hemisphere, nor do they underestimate the great qualities of the Spanish people, nor fail to fully recognize their splendid patriotism and their chivalrous devotion to the national honor.

They view with wonder and admiration the cheerful resolution with which vast bodies of men are sent across thousands of miles of ocean, and an enormous debt accumulated, that the costly possession of the Gem of the Antilles may still hold its place in the Spanish Crown. And yet neither the Government nor the people of the United States have shut their eyes to the course of events in Cuba, nor have failed to realize the existence of conceded grievances, which have led to the present revolt from the authority of Spain—grievances recognized by the Queen Regent and by the Cortes, voiced by the most patriotic and enlightened of Spanish statesmen, without regard to party, and demonstrated by reforms proposed by the executive and approved by the legislative branch of the Spanish Government. It is in the assumed temper and discretized the Spanish Government to remode the proposed by the executive and approved by the legislative branch of the Spanish Government. position of the Spanish Government to remedy these grievances, fortified by indications of influential public opinion in Spain, that this Government has hoped to discover the most promising and effective means of composing the present strife, with honor and advantage to Spain and with the achievement of all the reasonable objects of the insurrection.

It would seem that if Spain should offer to Cuba genuine autonomy—a measure of home rule which, while preserving the sover-eignty of Spain, would satisfy all rational requirements of her Spanish subjects—there should be no just reason why the pacifi-cation of the island might not be effected on that basis. Such a result would appear to be in the true interest of all concerned. result would appear to be in the true interest of all concerned. It would at once stop the conflict which is now consuming the resources of the island and making it worthless for whichever party may ultimately prevail. It would keep intact the possessions of Spain without touching her honor, which will be consulted rather than impugned by the adequate redress of admitted grievances. It would put the prosperity of the island and the fortunes of its inhabitants within their own control, without severing the natural and ancient ties which bind them to the mother country, and would yet enable them to test their capacity for self-government under the most favorable conditions. It has been objected on the one side that Spain should not promise autonomy objected on the one side that Spain should not promise autonomy objected on the one side that Spain should not promise autonomy until her insurgent subjects lay down their arms; on the other side, that promised autonomy, however liberal, is insufficient, because without assurance of the promise being fulfilled.

But the reasonableness of a requirement by Spain, of unconditional surrender on the part of the insurgent Cubans before their autonomy is conceded, is not altogether apparent. It ignores important features of the situation—the stability two years' duration has given to the insurrection; the feasibility of its indefinite prolongation in the nature of things, and as shown by past experience; the utter and imminent ruin of the island, unless the present strife is speedily composed; above all, the rank abuses which all parties in Spain, all branches of her Government, and all her leading public men concede to exist and profess a desire to remove. Facing such circumstances, to withhold the proffer of needed reforms until the parties demanding them put themselves at mercy by throwing down their arms, has the appearance of neglecting the gravest of perils and inviting suspicion as to the sincerity of any professed willingness to grant reforms. The objection on behalf of the insurgents—that promised reforms can not be relied upon—must of course be considered, though we not be relied upon—must of course be considered, though we have no right to assume, and no reason for assuming, that anything Spain undertakes to do for the relief of Cuba will not be done according to both the spirit and the letter of the undertaking.

Nevertheless, realizing that suspicions and precautions on the part of the weaker of two combatants are always natural and not always unjustifiable—being sincerely desirous in the interest of both as well as on its own account that the Cuban problem should be solved with the least possible delay—it was intimated by this Government to the Government of Spain some months ago that, if a satisfactory measure of home rule were tendered the Cuban insurgents, and would be accepted by them upon a guaranty of its execution, the United States would endeavor to find a way not objectionable to Spain of furnishing such guaranty. While no definite response to this intimation has yet been received from the Spanish Government, it is believed to be not altogether unwelcome, while, as already suggested, no reason is perceived why it should not be approved by the insurgents. Neither party can fail to see the importance of early action and both must realize that to prolong the present state of things for even a short period will add enormously to the time and labor and even a short period will add enormously to the time and labor and expenditure necessary to bring about the industrial recuperation of the island. It is therefore fervently hoped on all grounds that earnest efforts for healing the breach between Spain and the insurgent Cubans, upon the lines above indicated, may be at once inaugurated and pushed to an immediate and successful issue. The friendly offices of the United States, either in the manner above outlined or in any other way consistent with our Constitution and laws, will always be at the disposal of either party.

Whatever circumstances may arise, our policy and our interests

Whatever circumstances may arise, our policy and our interests would constrain us to object to the acquisition of the island or an interference with its control by any other power.

It should be added that it can not be reasonably assumed that the hitherto expectant attitude of the United States will be indefinitely maintained. While we are anxious to accord all due respect to the expectant attitude of the united States will be indefinitely maintained. to the sovereignty of Spain, we can not view the pending conflict in all its features and properly apprehend our inevitably close re-lations to it and its possible results without considering that by the course of events we may be drawn into such an unusual and unprecedented condition as will fix a limit to our patient waiting for Spain to end the contest, either alone and in her own way or with our friendly cooperation.

When the inability of Spain to deal successfully with the insurrection has become manifest and it is demonstrated that her sovereignty is extinct in Cuba for all purposes of its rightful existence and when a hopeless struggle for its reestablishment has degenerated into a strife which means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject-matter of the conflict, a situation will be presented in which our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain will be superseded by higher obligations, which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge. Deferring the choice of ways and methods until the time for action arrives, we should make them depend upon the precise conditions then existing; and they should not be determined upon without giving careful heed to every consideration involving our honor and interest or the international duty we owe to Spain. Until we face the contingencies suggested, or the situation is by other incidents imperatively changed, we should continue in the line of conduct heretofore pursued, thus in all circumstances ex-hibiting our obedience to the requirements of public law and our regard for the duty enjoined upon us by the position we occupy in the family of nations.

A contemplation of emergencies that may arise should plainly lead us to avoid their creation, either through a careless disregard of present duty or even an undue stimulation and ill-timed expression of feeling. But I have deemed it not amiss to remind the Congress that a time may arrive when a correct policy and care for our interests, as well as a regard for the interests of other nations and their citizens, joined by considerations of humanity and a desire to see a rich and fertile country, intimately related to us, saved from complete devastation, will constrain our Government to such action as will subserve the interests thus involved and at the same time promise to Cuba and its inhabitants an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace.

The Venezuelan boundary question has ceased to be a matter of difference between Great Britain and the United States, their respective Governments having agreed upon the substantial provisions of a treaty between Great Britain and Venezuela submitting the whole controversy to arbitration. The provisions of the lead us to avoid their creation, either through a careless disregard tring the whole controversy to arbitration. The provisions of the treaty are so eminently just and fair that the assent of Venezuela thereto may confidently be anticipated.

Negotiations for a treaty of general arbitration for all differences between Great Britain and the United States are far advanced and promise to reach a successful consummation at an early date.

The scheme of examining applicants for certain consular positions, to test their competency and fitness, adopted under an Executive order issued on the 20th of September, 1895, has fully demonstrated the usefulness of this innovation. In connection with this plan of examination, promotions and transfers of deserving incumbents have been quite extensively made, with excellent

During the past year 35 appointments have been made in the consular service, 27 of which were made to fill vacancies caused by death or resignation or to supply newly created posts, 2 to succeed incumbents removed for cause, 2 for the purpose of displacing alien consular officials by American citizens, and 4 merely changing the official title of incumbent from commercial agent to consul. Twelve of these appointments were transfers or promotions from other positions under the Department of State, 4 of those appointed had rendered previous service under the Department, 8 were made of persons who passed a satisfactory examination, 7 were appointed to places not included in the order of September 20, 1895, and 4 appointments, as above stated, involved no change of incum-

I desire to repeat the recommendation contained in my last annual message, in favor of providing at public expense official residences for our ambassadors and ministers at foreign capitals. The reasons supporting this recommendation are strongly stated in the report of the Secretary of State, and the subject seems of such importance that I hope it may receive the early attention of the Congress

The Secretary of the Treasury reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, the receipts of the Government from all sources amounted to $409,475,408.78. During the same period its expenditures were $434,678,654.48, the excess of expenditures over receipts thus amounting to $25,203,245.70. The ordinary expenditures during the year were $4,015,852.21 less than during the preceding fiscal year. Of the receipts mentioned there was derived from customs the sum of $160,021,751.67 and from internal revenue $146,830,615.66. The receipts from customs show an increase of $7,863,134.22 over those from the same source for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, and the receipts from internal revenue an increase of $3,584,537.91.

The value of our imported dutiable merchandise during the last fiscal year was $369,757,470, and the value of free goods imported $409,967,470, being an increase of $6,523,675 in the value of dutiable goods and $41,231,034 in the value of free goods over the preceding year. Our exports of merchandise, foreign and domestic, ceding year. Our exports of merchandise, foreign and domestic, amounted in value to $882,606,938, being an increase over the preceding year of $75,068,773. The average ad valorem duty paid on dutiable goods imported during the year was 39.94 per cent and on free and dutiable goods taken together 20.55 per cent.

The cost of collecting our internal revenue was 2.78 per cent, as against 2.81 per cent for the fiscal year ended June 30,1895. The total production of distilled spirits, exclusive of fruit brandies, was $6.588,703 tayable callons, being an increase of 6.639,108 gal-

The number of barrels of beer produced was 35,859,250, as against 33,589,784 produced in the preceding fiscal year, being an increase of 2,269,466 barrels.

The total amount of gold exported during the last fiscal year was $112,409,947 and of silver $60,541,670, being an increase of $45,941,466 of gold and $13,246,384 of silver over the exportations of the preceding fiscal year. The imports of gold were $33,525,-065 and of silver $28,777,186, being $2,859,695 less of gold and $8,566,007 more of silver than during the preceding year.

The total stock of metallic money in the United States at the close of the last fiscal year ended on the 30th day of June, 1896, was $1,228,326,035, of which $599,597,964 was in gold and $628,728,-071 in silver.

On the 1st day of November, 1896, the total stock of money of all kinds in the country was $2,285,410,590, and the amount in circulation, not including that in the Treasury holdings, was $1,627,055,641, being $22.63 per capita upon an estimated population of 71,902,000.

The production of the precious metals in the United States during the calendar year 1895 is estimated to have been 2,254,760 fine ounces of gold, of the value of $46,610,000, and 55,727,000 fine ounces of silver, of the commercial value of $36,445,000 and the coinage value of $72,051,000. The estimated production of these metals throughout the world during the same period was 9,688,821 fine ounces of gold, amounting to $200,285,700 in value, and 169,189,249 fine ounces of silver, of the commercial value of $110,654,000 and of the coinage value of $218,738,100 according to our ratio.

The coinage of these metals in the various countries of the world during the same calendar year amounted to $232,701,438 in gold and $121,996,219 in silver.

The total coinage at the mints of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, amounted to $71,188,468.52, of which $58,878,490 was in gold coins and $12,309,978.52 in standard silver dollars, subsidiary coins, and minor coins.

The total outstanding circulating notes of all national banks on the 31st day of October, 1896, amounted to $234,553,807, including unredeemed but fully secured notes of banks insolvent and in process of liquidation. The increase in national-bank circulation during the year ending on that day was $21,099,429. On October 6, 1896, when the condition of national banks was last reported, the total resources of the 3,679 active institutions was $3,263,685,313.83, which included $1,893,268,839.31 in loans and discounts and $369,165,723,85 in money of all kinds on hand. Of their liabilities $362,165,783.85 in money of all kinds on hand. Of their liabilities $1,597,891,058.73 was due to individual depositors, and $209,944,019 consisted of outstanding circulating notes.

There were organized during the year preceding the date last mentioned 28 national banks, located in 15 States, of which 12 were organized in the Eastern States, with a capital of $1,180,000;

6 in the Western States, with a capital of $875,000, and 10 in the Southern States, with a capital of $1,190,000. During the year, however, 37 banks voluntarily abandoned their franchises under the national law, and in the case of 27 others it was found necessary to appoint receivers. Therefore, as compared with the year preceding, there was a decrease of 36 in the number of active banks. The number of existing banks organized under State laws is 5,708. The number of immigrants arriving in the United States during the fiscal year was 343,267, of whom 340,468 were permitted to land, and 2,799 were debarred, on various grounds prescribed by law, and returned to the countries whence they came, at the expense of the steamship companies by which they were brought in. The increase in immigration over the preceding year amounted to 84,731. It is reported that with some exceptions the immigrants of the past year were of a hardy laboring class, accustomed and able to earn a support for themselves, and it is estimated that the money brought with them amounted to at least $5,000,000, though it was probably much in excess of that sum, since only those having less than $30 are required to disclose the exact amount, and it is known that many brought considerable sums of money to buy land and build homes. Including all the immigrants arriving who were over 14 years of age, 28.63 per cent were illiterate, as against 20.87 per cent of those of that age arriving during the preceding fiscal year. The number of immigrants over 14 years old, the countries from which they came, and the percentage of illiterates among them, were as follows: Italy, 57.515, with 54.59 per cent; Ireland, 37,496, with 7 per cent; Russia, 35,188, with 41.14 per cent; Austria-Hungary and provinces, 57,053, with 38.92 per cent; Germany, 25,334, with 2.96 per cent; Sweden, 18,821, with 1.16 per cent, while from Portugal there came 2,067, of whom 77.69 per cent were illiterate. There arrived from Japan during the year only 1,110 immigrants, and it is the opinion of the immigration authorities that the apprehension heretofore existing to some extent of a large land and build homes. Including all the immigrants arriving who that the apprehension heretofore existing to some extent of a large immigration from Japan to the United States is without any substantial foundation.

From the Life-Saving Service it is reported that the number of disasters to documented vessels within the limits of its operations during the year was 437. These vessels had on board 4,608 perduring the year was 437. These vessels had on board 4,608 persons, of whom 4,595 were saved and 13 lost. The value of such vessels is estimated at $8,880,140 and of their cargoes $3,846,880, making the total value of property imperiled $12,726,520. Of this amount $11,292,707 was saved and $1,432,750 was lost. Sixty-seven of the vessels were totally wrecked. There were besides 243 casualties to small undocumented craft, on board of which there were 594 persons, of whom 597 were saved and 7 were lost. The value of the property involved in these latter casualties is estimated at $119,265 of which $114,915 was saved and $4,850 was lost. The $119,265, of which $114,915 was saved and $4,350 was lost. life-saving crews during the year also rescued or assisted numerous other vessels and warned many from danger by signals, both by day and night. The number of disasters during the year exceeded that of any previous year in the history of the service, but the saving of both life and property was greater than ever before in proportion to the value of the property involved and to the number of persons imperiled.

The operations of the Marine-Hospital Service, the Revenue-Cutter Service, the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Light-House Service, the Bureau of Navigation, and other branches of public Service, the Bureau of Navigation, and other branches of public work attached to the Treasury Department, together with various recommendations concerning their support and improvement, are fully stated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which the attention of the Congress is especially invited.

The report of the Secretary of War exhibits satisfactory conditions in the several branches of the public service intrusted to his charge.

Army are excellent, and marked progress and efficiency are apparent throughout its entire organization.

With the exception of delicate duties in the suppression of slight Indian disturbances along our southwestern boundary, in which the Mexican troops cooperated, and the compulsory but peaceful return, with the consent of Great Britain, of a band of Cree Indians from Montana to the British Possessions, no active operations have been required of the Army during the year past.

Changes in methods of administration, the abandonment of unnecessary posts and consequent concentration of troops, and the exercise of care and vigilance by the various officers charged with the responsibility, in the expenditure of the appropriations.

with the responsibility, in the expenditure of the appropriations, have resulted in reducing to a minimum the cost of maintenance of our military establishment.

During the past year the work of constructing permanent infantry and cavalry posts has been continued at the places here-tofore designated. The Secretary of War repeats his recommendation that appropriations for barracks and quarters should more strictly conform to the needs of the service as judged by the De-partment rather than respond to the wishes and importunities of localities. It is imperative that much of the money provided for such construction should now be allotted to the erection of necessary quarters for the garrisons assigned to the coast defenses, where many men will be needed to properly care for and operate modern guns. It is essential, too, that early provision be made to supply the necessary force of artillery to meet the demands of this service.

The entire Army has now been equipped with the new magazine arms, and wise policy demands that all available public and private resources should be so employed as to provide within a reasonable time a sufficient number to supply the State militia with these modern weapons and provide an ample reserve for any emergency.

The organized militia numbers 112,879 men. The appropriations for its support by the several States approximate $2,800,000 annually, and $400,000 is contributed by the General Government. Investigation shows these troops to be usually well drilled and inspired with much military interest, but in many instances they are so deficient in proper arms and equipment that a sudden call to active duty would find them inadequately prepared for field service. I therefore recommend that prompt measures be taken to remedy this condition, and that every encouragement be given to this deserving body of unpaid and voluntary citizen soldiers, upon whose assistance we must largely rely in time of trouble. upon whose assistance we must largely rely in time of trouble.

During the past year rapid progress has been made toward the completion of the scheme adopted for the erection and armament of fortifications along our seacoast, while equal progress has been made in providing the material for submarine defense in connection with these works.

It is peculiarly gratifying at this time to note the great advance that has been made in this important undertaking since the date of my annual message to the Fifty-third Congress at the opening of its second session, in December, 1893. At that time I informed the Congress of the approaching completion of nine 12-inch, twenty 10-inch, and thirty-four 8-inch high-power steel guns, and seventyfive 12-inch rifled mortars

This total then seemed insignificant when compared with the great work remaining to be done. Yet it was none the less a source of satisfaction to every citizen when he reflected that it represented the first installment of the new ordnance of American design and American manufacture, and demonstrated our ability to supply from our own resources guns of unexcelled power and

At that date, however, there were practically no carriages upon which to mount these guns, and only 31 emplacements for guns and 64 for mortars. Nor were all these emplacements in condition to receive their armament. Only one high-power gun was at that time in position for the defense of the entire coast.

Since that time the number of guns actually completed has been increased to a total of twenty-one 12-inch, fifty-six 10-inch, sixty-one 8-inch high-power breech-loading steel guns, ten rapid-fire guns, and eighty 12-inch rifled mortars. In addition, there are in process of construction one 16-inch-type gun, fifty 12-inch fifty. process of construction one 16-inch-type gun, fifty 12-inch, fifty-six 10-inch, twenty-seven 8-inch high-power guns, and sixty-six six 10-inch, twenty-seven 8-inch high-power guns, and sixty-six 12-inch rifled mortars; in all, 428 guns and mortars.

During the same year, immediately preceding the message referred to, the first modern gun carriage had been completed and eleven more were in process of construction. All but one were of the nondisappearing type. These, however, were not such as to secure necessary cover for the artillery gunners against the intense fire of modern machine rapid-fire and high-power guns.

The inventive genius of ordnance and civilian experts has been taxed in designing carriages that would obviate this fault, resulting, it is believed, in the solution of this difficult problem. Since 1893 the number of gun carriages constructed or building has been raised to a total of 129, of which 90 are on the disappearing principle. ciple, and the number of mortar carriages to 152, while the 95 emplacements which were provided for prior to that time have been increased to 280 built and building.

This improved situation is largely due to the recent generous response of Congress to the recommendations of the War Depart-

Thus we shall soon have complete about one-fifth of the comprehensive system, the first step in which was noted in my message to the Congress of December 4, 1893.

When it is understood that a masonry emplacement not only furnishes a platform for the heavy modern high-power gun, but also in every particular serves the purpose and takes the place of the fort of former days, the importance of the work accomplished is better comprehended. In the hope that the work will be prosecuted with no less vigor in the future, the Secretary of War has submitted an estimate by which, if allowed, there will be provided and either built or building by the end of the next fiscal year such additional guns, mortars, gun carriages, and emplacements as will represent not far from one-third of the total work to be done under the plan adopted for our coast defenses, thus affording a prospect that the entire work will be substantially completed within six years. In less time than that, however, we shall have attained a marked degree of security.

The experience and results of the past year demonstrate that with a continuation of present careful methods the cost of the remaining work will be much less than the original estimate maining work will be much less than the original estimate.

We should always keep in mind that of all forms of military preparation coast defense alone is essentially pacific in its nature. While it gives the sense of security due to a consciousness of strength, it is neither the purpose nor the effect of such permanent fortification to involve us in foreign complications, but rather to guarantee us against them. They are not temptation to war, but security against it. Thus they are thoroughly in accord with all the traditions of our national diplomacy.

The Attorney-General presents a detailed and interesting statement of the important work done under his supervision during the last fiscal year.

The ownership and management by the Government of penitentiaries for the confinement of those convicted in United States courts of violations of Federal laws, which for many years has been a subject of Executive recommendation, has at last to a slight extent been realized by the utilization of the abandoned military prison at Fort Leavenworth as a United States penitentiary.

This is certainly a movement in the right direction; but it ought to be at once supplemented by the rebuilding or extensive enlargement of this improvised prison, and the construction of at least ment of this improvised prison, and the construction of at least one more, to be located in the Southern States. The capacity of the Leavenworth penitentiary is so limited that the expense of its maintenance, calculated at a per capita rate upon the number of prisoners it can accommodate, does not make as economical an exhibit as it would if it were larger and better adapted to prison purposes; but I am thoroughly convinced that economy, humanity, and a proper sense of responsibility and duty toward those whom we punish for violations of Federal law dictate that the Federal Government should have the entire control and management of the penitentiaries where convicted violators are confined.

It appears that since the transfer of the Fort Leavenworth military prison to its new uses the work previously done by prisoners confined there, and for which expensive machinery has been provided, has been discontinued. This work consisted of the manufacture of articles for army use, now done elsewhere. On all grounds, it is exceedingly desirable that the convicts confined in this penitentiary be allowed to resume work of this description.

It is most gratifying to note the satisfactory results that have followed the inauguration of the new system provided for by the act of May 28, 1896, under which certain Federal officers are compensated by salaries instead of fees. The new plan was put in operation on the 1st day of July, 1896, and already the great economy it enforces, its prevention of abuses, and its tendency to a better enforcement of the laws, are strikingly apparent. Detailed evidence of the usefulness of this long delayed but now happily accomplished reform will be found clearly set forth in the Attorney-General's report.

Our Post-Office Department is in good condition, and the exhibit made of its operations during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, if allowance is made for imperfections in the laws applicable to it, is very satisfactory. The total receipts during the year were $82,499,208.40. The total expenditures were $90,626,296.84, exclusive of $1,559,898.27 which was earned by the Pacific railroads for transportation and credited on their debt to the Government. There was an increase of receipts over the previous year of $5,516,080.21, or 7.1 per cent, and an increase of expenditures of $3,836,124.02, or 4.42 per cent. The deficit was $1,679,956.19 less than that of the preceding year. The chief expenditures of the postal service are regulated by law and are not in the control of the Postmaster-General. All that he can accomplish by the most watchful administration and economy is to enforce prompt and watchful administration and economy is to enforce prompt and thorough collection and accounting for public moneys and such minor savings in small expenditures and in letting those contracts, for post-office supplies and star service, which are not regulated

An effective cooperation between the Auditor's Office and the Post-Office Department, and the making and enforcement of orders by the Department requiring immediate notification to their sureties of all delinquencies on the part of postmasters, and compelling such postmasters to make more frequent deposits of postal funds. have resulted in a prompter auditing of their accounts and much less default to the Government than heretofore.

The year's report shows large extensions of both star-route service and railway-mail service, with increased postal facilities. Much higher accuracy in handling mails has also been reached, as appears by the decrease of errors in the Railway Mail Service and the reduction of mail matter returned to the Dead-Letter Office.

The deficit for the last year, although much less than that of the last and preceding years, emphasizes the necessity for legislation to correct the growing abuse of second-class rates, to which the deficiency is mainly attributable. The transmission at the rate of 1 cent a pound of serial libraries, advertising sheets, "house organs" (periodicals advertising some particular "house" or institution), sample copies, and the like ought certainly to be discon-A glance at the revenues received for the work done last year will show more plainly than any other statement the gross abuse of the postal service and the growing waste of its earnings. The free matter carried in the mails for the Departments, offices, etc., of the Government, and for Congress, in pounds, amounted to 94,480,189.

If this is offset against buildings for post-offices and stations, the rental of which would more than compensate for such free postal service, we have this exhibit:

Weight of mail matter (other than above) transmitted through the mail for the year ending June 30, 1896.

Class.	Weight.	Revenue.

The remainder of our postal revenue, amounting to something more than $5,000,000, was derived from box rents, registry fees, money-order business, and other similar items.

The entire expenditures of the Department, including pay for transportation credited to the Pacific railroads, was $92,186,195.11, which may be considered as the cost of receiving, carrying, and delivering the above mail matter. It thus appears that though the second-class matter constituted more than two-thirds of the total that was carried, the revenue derived from it was less than one-thirtieth of the total expense.

The average revenue from each pound of first-class

93 cents matter was From each pound of second class. 8½ mills (Of the second class 52,348,297 was county-free matter.) From each pound of third class 13.1 cents From each pound of fourth class.... 15.6 cents

The growth in weight of second-class matter has been from 299,000,000 pounds in 1894 to 312,000,000 in 1895, and to almost 349,000,000 in 1896, and it is quite evident this increasing drawback is far outstripping any possible growth of postal revenues.

Our mail service should of course be such as to meet the wants and even the conveniences of our people, at a direct charge upon them so light as perhaps to exclude the idea of our Post-Office Department being a money-making concern; but in the face of a constantly recurring deficiency in its revenues, and in view of the fact that we supply the best mail service in the world, it seems to me it is quite time to correct the abuses that swell enormously our annual deficit. If we concede the public policy of carrying weekly newspapers free in the county of publication, and even the policy of carrying at less than one-tenth of their cost other bona fide newspapers and periodicals, there can be no excuse for subjecting the service to the further immense and increasing loss involved in carrying at the nominal rate of 1 cent a pound the serial libraries, sometimes including trashy and even harmful literature, and other matter which, under the loose interpretation of a loose statute, has been gradually given second-class rates, thus absorbing all profitable returns derived from first-class matter, which pays three or four times more than its cost, and producing a large annual loss to be paid by general taxation. If such second-class matter paid merely the cost of its handling our deficit would disappear and a surplus result which might be used to give the people still better mail facilities or cheaper rates of letter postage. I recommend that legislation be at once enacted to correct these abuses and introduce better business ideas in the regulation of our postal rates.

Experience and observation have demonstrated that certain improvements in the organization of the Post-Office Department must be secured before we can gain the full benefit of the immense sums expended in its administration. This involves the mense sums expended in its administration.

following reforms, which I earnestly recommend:

There should be a small addition to the existing inspector service, to be employed in the supervision of the carrier force, which now numbers 13,000 men, and performs its service practically without the surveillance exercised over all other branches of the without the surveillance exercised over all other branches of the postal or public service. Of course such a lack of supervision and freedom from wholesome disciplinary restraints must inevitably lead to imperfect service. There should also be appointed a few inspectors who could assist the central office in necessary investigation concerning matters of post-office leases, post-office sites, allowances for rent, fuel, and lights, and in organizing and securing the best results from the work of the 14,000 clerks now employed in first and second clear efficient. ployed in first and second class offices.

I am convinced that the small expense attending the inaugura-tion of these reforms would actually be a profitable investment.

I especially recommend such a recasting of the appropriations by Congress, for the Post-Office Department, as will permit the Postmaster-General to proceed with the work of consolidating post-offices. This work has already been entered upon sufficiently to fully demonstrate, by experiment and experience, that such consolidation is productive of better service, larger revenues, and less expenditures, to say nothing of the further advantage of gradually withdrawing post-offices from the spoils system.

The Universal Postal Union, which now embraces all the civilized world, and whose delegates will represent 1,000,000,000 people, will hold its fifth congress in the city of Washington in May, 1897. The United States may be said to have taken the initiative which led to the first meeting of this congress at Berne in 1874, and the formation of the Universal Postal Union, which brings the postal service of all countries to every man's neighborhood and has wrought marvels in cheapening postal rates and secur-ing absolutely safe mail communication throughout the world. Previous congresses have met in Berne, Paris, Lisbon, and enna, and the respective countries in which they have assembled have made generous provision for their accommodation and for the reception and entertainment of the delegates.

In view of the importance of this assemblage and of its deliberations, and of the honors and hospitalities accorded to our representatives by other countries on similar occasions, I earnestly hope that such an appropriation will be made for the expenses necessarily attendant upon the coming meeting in our capital city as will be worthy of our national hospitality and indicative of our appreciation of the event.

The work of the Navy Department and its present condition are fully exhibited in the report of the Secretary.

The construction of vessels for our new Navy has been energetically prosecuted by the present Administration upon the general lines previously adopted, the Department having seen no necessity for radical changes in prior methods under which the work was for radical changes in prior methods under which the work was found to be progressing in a manner highly satisfactory. It has been decided, however, to provide in every shipbuilding contract that the builder should pay all trial expenses, and it has also been determined to pay no speed premiums in future contracts. The premiums recently earned and some yet to be decided are features of the contracts made before this conclusion was reached.

On March 4, 1893, there were in commission but 2 armored vessels, the double-turreted monitors Miantonomoh and Monterey. Since that date, of vessels theretofore authorized, there have been placed in their first commission 3 first-class and 2 secondclass battle ships, 2 armored cruisers, 1 harbor-defense ram, and 5 double-turreted monitors, including the Maine and the Puritan, just completed. Eight new unarmored cruisers and 2 new gunboats have also been commissioned. The Iowa, another battle ship, will be completed about March 1, and at least 4 more gunboats will be ready for sea in the early spring.

It is gratifying to state that our ships and their outfits are believed to be equal to the best that can be manufactured elsewhere, and that such notable reductions have been made in their cost as to justify the statement that quite a number of vessels are now being constructed at rates as low as those that prevail in European

Our manufacturing facilities are at this time ample for all possible naval contingencies. Three of our Government navy-yards, those at Mare Island, Cal., Norfolk, Va., and Brooklyn, N. Y., are equipped for shipbuilding, our ordnance plant in Washington is equal to any in the world, and at the torpedo station we are successfully making the highest grades of smokeless powder. Three first-class private shipyards, at Newport News, Philadelphia, and San Francisco, are building battle ships; 11 contractors, situated in the States of Maine, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey Maryland Virginia and the State of Washington are Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, and the State of Washington, are constructing gunboats or torpedo boats; 2 plants are manufac-turing large quantities of first-class armor, and American facto-ries are producing automobile torpedoes, powder, projectiles, rapid-fire guns, and everything else necessary for the complete outfit of naval vessels.

There have been authorized by Congress since March, 1893, 5 battle ships, 6 light-draft gunboats, 16 torpedo boats, and 1 subbattle snips, 6 light-draft gunboats, 16 torpedo boats, and I submarine torpedo boat. Contracts for the building of all of them have been let. The Secretary expresses the opinion that we have for the present a sufficient supply of cruisers and gunboats, and that hereafter the construction of battle ships and torpedo boats

will supply our needs.

Much attention has been given to the methods of carrying on departmental business. Important modifications in the regulations have been made, tending to unify the control of shipbuilding, as far as may be, under the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and also to improve the mode of purchasing supplies for the Navy by the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. The establishment, under recent acts of Congress, of a supply fund, with which to purchase these supplies in large quantities, and other modifications of methods, have tended materially to their cheapening and better quality.

The War College has developed into an institution which it is The War College has developed into an institution which it is believed will be of great value to the Navy in teaching the science of war, as well as in stimulating professional zeal in the Navy; and it will be especially useful in the devising of plans for the utilization, in case of necessity, of all the naval resources of the United States.

The Secretary has persistently adhered to the plan he found in operation for securing labor at navy-yards, through boards of labor employment, and has done much to make it more complete and efficient. The naval officers who are familiar with this system and its operation express the decided opinion that its results have been to vastly improve the character of the work done at our yards and greatly reduce its cost.

Discipline among the officers and men of the Navy has been maintained to a high standard, and the percentage of American citizens enlisted has been very much increased.

The Secretary is considering, and will formulate during the coming winter, a plan for laying up ships in reserve, thereby largely reducing the cost of maintaining our vessels afloat. This plan contemplates that battle ships, torpedo boats, and such of the cruisers as are not needed for active service at sea shall be kept in reserve, with skeleton crews on board to keep them in condition, cruising only enough to insure the efficiency of the ships and their crews in time of activity.

The economy to result from this system is too obvious to need comment.

The Naval Militia, which was authorized a few years ago as an experiment, has now developed into a body of enterprising young men, active and energetic in the discharge of their duties and promising great usefulness. This establishment has nearly the same relation to our Navy as the National Guard in the different States bears to our Army; and it constitutes a source of supply for our naval forces the importance of which is immediately apparent.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents a comprehensive and interesting exhibit of the numerous and important affairs committed to his supervision. It is impossible in this communication to do more than briefly refer to a few of the subjects concerning which the Secretary gives full and instructive infor-

The money appropriated on account of this Department and for its disbursement for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, amounted to more than $157,000,000, or a greater sum than was appropriated for the entire maintenance of the Government for the two fiscal years ended June 30, 1861.

Our public lands, originally amounting to 1,840,000,000 acres, have been so reduced that only about 600,000,000 acres still remain in Government control, excluding Alaska. The balance, have been so reduced that only about 600,000,000 acres still remain in Government control, excluding Alaska. The balance, being by far the most valuable portion, has been given away to settlers, to new States, and to railroads, or sold at a comparatively nominal sum. The patenting of land in execution of railroad grants has progressed rapidly during the year, and since the 4th day of March, 1893, about 25,000,000 acres have thus been conveyed to these corporations.

I agree with the Secretary that the remainder of our public lands should be more carefully dealt with and their alienation guarded by better economy and greater prudence.

The commission appointed from the membership of the National Academy of Sciences, provided for by an act of Congress, to formulate plans for a national forestry system, will, it is hoped, soon be prepared to present the result of thorough and intelligent examination of this important subject.

The total Indian population of the United States is 177,235, according to a census made in 1895, exclusive of those within the State of New York and those comprising the Five Civilized Tribes. Of this number there are approximately 38,000 children of school age. During the year 23,393 of these were enrolled in schools. The progress which has attended recent efforts to extend Indian school facilities, and the anticipation of continued liberal appropriations to that end, can not fail to afford the utmost satisfaction to those who believe that the education of Indian children is a prime factor in the accomplishment of Indian civilization.

It may be said in general terms that in every particular the improvement of the Indians under Government care has been most marked and encouraging.

The Secretary, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the agents having charge of Indians to whom allotments have been made strongly urge the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of liquor to allottees who have taken their lands in severalty. I earnestly join in this recommendation, and venture to express the hope that the Indian may be speedily protected against this greatest of all obstacles to his well-being and advancement.

The condition of affairs among the Five Civilized Tribes, who occupy large tracts of land in the Indian Territory and who have governments of their own, has assumed such an aspect as to render it almost indispensable that there should be an entire change in the relations of these Indians to the General Government. This seems to be necessary in furtherance of their own interests, as well as for the protection of non-Indian residents in their territory. A commission organized and empowered under several recent laws is now negotiating with these Indians for the relinquishment of their courts and the division of their common lands quishment of their courts and the division of their common lands in severalty, and are aiding in the settlement of the troublesome question of tribal membership. The reception of their first proffers of negotiation was not encouraging; but through patience and such conduct on their part as demonstrated that their intentions were friendly and in the interest of the tribes, the prospect of success has become more promising. The effort should be to save these Indians from the consequences of their own mistakes and improvidence, and to secure to the real Indian his rights as against intruders and professed friends who profit by his retrogression. A change is also needed to protect life and property through the operation of courts conducted according to strict justice and strong enough to enforce their mandates

As a sincere friend of the Indian, I am exceedingly anxious that these reforms should be accomplished with the consent and aid of the tribes, and that no necessity may be presented for radical or drastic legislation. I hope, therefore, that the Commission now conducting negotiations will soon be able to report that progress has been made toward a friendly adjustment of existing difficulties.

It appears that a very valuable deposit of gilsonite or asphaltum has been found on the reservation in Utah occupied by the Uncompalgre Ute Indians. Every consideration of care for the public interest and every sensible business reason dictate such management or disposal of this important source of public revenue as will except it from the general rules and incidents attending the ordinary disposition of public lands, and secure to the Government a fair share at least of its advantages in place of its transfer for a nominal sum to interested individuals.

I indorse the recommendation made by the present Secretary of the Interior, as well as his predecessor, that a permanent commission, consisting of three members, one of whom shall be an army officer, be created to perform the duties now devolving upon the Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The management of the Bureau involves such numerous and diverse details, and the advantages of an uninterrupted policy are so apparent, that I hope the change suggested will meet the approval of the Congres

The diminution of our enormous pension roll and the decrease of pension expenditure, which have been so often confidently fore-told, still fail in material realization. The number of pensioners on the rolls at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30,1896, was 970,678. This is the largest number ever reported. The amount paid exclusively for pensions during the year was $138,214,761.94a slight decrease from that of the preceding year, while the totat expenditures on account of pensions, including the cost of main, taining the Department and expenses attending pension distribution, amounted to $142,203,550.59, or within a very small fraction of one-third of the entire expense of supporting the Government during the same year. The number of new pension certificates issued was 90,640. Of these, 40,374 represent original allowances issued was 49,640. Of these, 40,374 represent original allowances of claims, and 15,878 increases of existing pensions.

The number of persons receiving pensions from the United States but residing in foreign countries at the close of the last fiscal year was 3,781, and the amount paid to them during the year was $582,735,38.

The sum appropriated for the payment of pensions for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1897, is $140,000,000, and for the succeeding year it is estimated that the same amount will be nec-

The Commissioner of Pensions reports that during the last fiscal year 339 indictments were found against violators of the pension laws. Upon these indictments 167 convictions resulted.

In my opinion, based upon such statements as these and much other information and observation, the abuses which have been allowed to creep into our pension system have done incalculable harm in demoralizing our people and undermining good citizen-ship. I have endeavored within my sphere of official duty to protect our pension roll and make it what it should be, a roll of honor, containing the names of those disabled in their country's service and worthy of their country's affectionate remembrance. When I have seen those who pose as the soldiers' friends active and alert in urging greater laxity and more reckless pension expenditure, while nursing selfish schemes, I have deprecated the approach of a situation when necessary retrenchment and enforced economy may lead to an attack upon pension abuses so determined as to over-look the discrimination due to those who, worthy of a nation's care, ought to live and die under the protection of a nation's

The Secretary calls attention to the public interests involved in an adjustment of the obligations of the Pacific railroads to the Government. I deem it to be an important duty to especially present this subject to the consideration of the Congres

On January 1, 1897, with the amount already matured, more than $13,000,000 of the principal of the subsidy bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of the Union Pacific Railway, including its Kansas line, and more than $6,000,000 of like bonds, issued in aid of the Central Pacific Railroad, including those issued to the Western Pacific Railroad Company, will have fallen due and been paid or must on that day be paid by the Government. Without any reference to the application of the sinking fund now in the Treasury, this will create such a default on the part of these companies to the Government as will give it the right part of these companies to the Government as will give it the right to at once institute proceedings to foreclose its mortgage lien. In addition to this indebtedness, which will be due January 1, 1897, there will mature between that date and January 1, 1899, the remaining principal of such subsidy bonds, which must also be met by the Government. These amount to more than $20,000,000 on account of Union Pacific lines, and exceed $21,000,000 on account of the Central Pacific lines

The situation of these roads and the condition of their indebtedness to the Government have been fully set forth in the reports of various committees to the present and prior Congresses, and as early as 1887 they were thoroughly examined by a special commission appointed pursuant to an act of Congress. The considerations sion appointed pursuant to an act of Congress. The considerations requiring an adjustment of the Government's relations to the companies have been clearly presented, and the conclusion reached with practical uniformity, that if these relations are not terminated they should be revised upon a basis securing their safe continuous.

Under section 4 of the act of Congress passed March 3, 1887, the President is charged with the duty, in the event that any mortgage or other incumbrance paramount to the interest of the United States in the property of the Pacific railroads shall exist and be lawfully liable to be enforced, to direct the action of the Departments of Treasury and of Justice in the protection of the interest of the United States by redemption or through judicial proceedings, including foreclosures of the Government liens.

In view of the fact that the Congress has for a number of years almost constantly had under consideration various plans for dealing with the conditions existing between these roads and the Government, I have thus far felt justified in withholding action under the statute above mentioned.

the statute above mentioned.

In the case of the Union Pacific Company, however, the situation has become especially and immediately urgent. Proceedings have been instituted to foreclose a first mortgage upon those aided parts of the main lines upon which the Government holds a secparts of the main lines upon which the Government holds a second and subordinate mortgage lien. In consequence of those proceedings and increasing complications, added to the default occurring on the 1st day of January, 1897, a condition will be presented at that date, so far as this company is concerned, that must emphasize the mandate of the act of 1887 and give to Executive duty under its provisions a more imperative aspect. Therefore, unless Congress shall otherwise direct or shall have previous ously determined upon a different solution of the problem, there will hardly appear to exist any reason for delaying beyond the date of the default above mentioned such Executive action as will promise to subserve the public interests and save the Government from the loss threatened by further inaction.

The Department of Agriculture is so intimately related to the welfare of our people and the prosperity of our nation that it should constantly receive the care and encouragement of the Government. From small beginnings it has grown to be the center of agricultural intelligence and the source of aid and encouragement to agricultural efforts. Large sums of money are annually appropropriated for the maintenance of this Department, and it must be confessed that the legislation relating to it has not always been directly in the interest of practical farming, or properly guarded against waste and extravagance. So far, however, as public money has been appropriated fairly and sensibly to help those who actually till the soil, no expenditure has been more profitably made or more generally approved by the people.

Under the present management of the Department its usefulness has been enhanced in every direction, and at the same time strict economy has been enforced to the utmost extent permitted by Congressional action. From the report of the Secretary it appears that through careful and prudent financial management he has annually saved a large sum from his appropriations, aggregating during his incumbency and up to the close of the present fiscal year nearly one-fifth of the entire amount appropriated. These results have been accomplished by a conscientious study of the real needs of the farmer and such a regard for economy as the genuine farmer ought to appreciate, supplemented by a rigid adherence to civil-service methods in a Department which should be conducted in the interest of agriculture instead of partisan politics.

The Secretary reports that the value of our exports of farm products during the last fiscal year amounted to $570,000,000, an increase of $17,000,000 over those of the year immediately preceding. This statement is not the less welcome because of the fact that, notwithstanding such increase, the proportion of exported agricultural products to our total exports of all descriptions fell off during the year. The benefits of an increase in agricultural exports being assured, the decrease in its proportion to our total exports is The benefits of an increase in agricultural exports the more gratifying when we consider that it is owing to the fact that such total exports for the year increased more than $75,000,000.

The large and increasing exportation of our agricultural products suggests the great usefulness of the organization lately established in the Department for the purpose of giving to those engaged in farming pursuits reliable information concerning the condition, needs, and advantages of different foreign markets. Inasmuch as heeds, and advantages of different foreign markets. Inasmuch as the success of the farmer depends upon the advantageous sale of his products, and inasmuch as foreign markets must largely be the destination of such products, it is quite apparent that a knowledge of the conditions and wants that affect those markets ought to result in sowing more intelligently and reaping with a better promise of profit. Such information points out the way to a prudent foresight in the selection and cultivation of crops and to a release from the bondage of unreasoning monotony of production, a glutted and depressed market, and constantly recurring unprofitable toil.

In my opinion the gratuitous distribution of seeds by the Department as at present conducted ought to be discontinued. No one can read the statement of the Secretary on this subject and doubt the extravagance and questionable results of this practice. The professed friends of the farmer, and certainly the farmers themselves, are naturally expected to be willing to rid a Department devoted to the promotion of farming interests of a feature which tends so much to its discredit tends so much to its discredit.

The Weather Bureau, now attached to the Department of Agriculture, has continued to extend its sphere of usefulness, and by an uninterrupted improvement in the accuracy of its forecasts has greatly increased its efficiency as an aid and protection to all whose occupations are related to weather conditions.

Omitting further reference to the operations of the Department, I commend the Secretary's report and the suggestions it contains to the careful consideration of the Congress.

The progress made in civil-service reform furnishes a cause for the utmost congratulation. It has survived the doubts of its friends as well as the rancor of its enemies and has gained a permanent place among the agencies destined to cleanse our politics manent place among the agencies destined to cleanse our politics and to improve, economize, and elevate the public service.

There are now in the competitive classified service upward of eighty-four thousand places. More than half of these have been included from time to time since March 4, 1893. A most radical and sweeping extension was made by Executive order dated the 6th day of May, 1896, and if fourth-class postmasterships are not included in the statement it may be said that practically all positions contemplated by the civil-service law are now classified. Abundant reasons exist for including these postmasterships, based upon economy, improved service, and the peace and quiet of neighborhoods. If, however, obstacles prevent such action at present, I earnestly hope that Congress will, without increasing post-office appropriations, so adjust them as to permit in proper cases a consolidation of these post-offices, to the end that through this process the result desired may to a limited extent be accomplished.

The civil-service rules as amended during the last year provide

The civil-service rules as amended during the last year provide for a sensible and uniform method of promotion, basing eligibility to better positions upon demonstrated efficiency and faithfulness. The absence of fixed rules on this subject has been an infirmity in the system more and more apparent as its other benefits have been better appreciated.

The advantages of civil-service methods in their business aspects are too well understood to require argument. has become a necessity to the executive work of the Government. But those who gain positions through the operation of these methods should be made to understand that the nonpartisan scheme through which they receive their appointments demands from them, by way of reciprocity, nonpartisan and faithful performance of duty under every Administration, and cheerful fidelity to every chief. While they should be encouraged to decently exercise their rights of citizenship and to support through their suffrages the political beliefs they honestly profess, the noisy, pestilent, and partisan employee, who loves political turmoil and contention, or who renders lax and grudging service to an Administration not representing his political views, should be promptly and fearlessly dealt with in such a way as to furnish a warning to others who may be likewise disposed.

The annual report of the Commissioners will be duly transmitted, and I commend the important matter they have in charge to the careful consideration of the Congress.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has, during the last year, has become a necessity to the executive work of the Government.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has, during the last year, supplied abundant evidence of its usefulness and the importance of the work committed to its charge.

Public transportation is a universal necessity, and the question of just and reasonable charges therefor has become of vital importance not only to shippers and carriers, but also to the vast multitude of producers and consumers. The justice and equity of the principles embodied in the existing law passed for the pur-of the principles embodied in the existing law passed for the purpose of regulating these charges are everywhere conceded, and there appears to be no question that the policy thus entered upon has a permanent place in our legislation.

As the present statute when enacted was, in the nature of the case, more or less tentative and experimental, it was hardly expected to supply a complete and adequate system. While its wholesome effects are manifest and have amply justified its enactment, it is evident that all desired reforms in transportation methods have not been fully accomplished. In view of the judicial interpretation which some provisions of this statute have received and the defects disclosed by the efforts made for its enforcement, its revision and amendment appear to be essential to the end that its revision and amendment appear to be essential to the end that it may more effectually reach the evils designed to be corrected. I hope the recommendations of the Commission upon this subject will be promptly and favorably considered by the Congress.

I desire to recur to the statements elsewhere made concerning the Government's receipts and expenditures for the purpose of venturing upon some suggestions touching our present tariff law

This statute took effect on the 28th day of August, 1894. What-ever may be its shortcomings as a complete measure of tariff re-form, it must be conceded that it has opened the way to a freer and greater exchange of commodities between us and other countries, and thus furnished a wider market for our products and

The only entire fiscal year during which this law has been in force ended on the 30th day of June, 1896. In that year our imports increased over those of the previous year more than $6,500,000, while the value of the domestic products we exported, and which found markets abroad, was nearly $70,000,000 more

Those who insist that the cost to our people of articles coming to them from abroad for their needful use should only be increased through tariff charges to an extent necessary to meet the expenses of the Government, as well as those who claim that tariff charges may be laid upon such articles beyond the necessities of Government. ment revenue, and with the additional purpose of so increasing ment revenue, and with the additional purpose of so increasing their price in our markets as to give American manufacturers and producers better and more profitable opportunities, must agree that our tariff laws are only primarily justified as sources of revenue to enable the Government to meet the necessary expenses of its maintenance. Considered as to its sufficiency in this aspect, the present law can by no means fall under just condemnation. During the only complete fiscal year of its operation it has yielded as the condemnation of the condemnation of the condemnation. nearly $8,000,000 more revenue than was received from tariff duties in the preceding year. There was, nevertheless, a deficit between our receipts and expenditures of a little more than $25,000,000. This, however, was not unexpected.

The situation was such in December last, seven months before

The situation was such in December last, seven months before the close of the fiscal year, that the Secretary of the Treasury fore-told a deficiency of $17,000,000. The great and increasing appre-hension and timidity in business circles and the depression in all activities intervening since that time, resulting from causes per-fectly well understood and entirely disconnected with our tariff law or its operation, seriously checked the imports we would have otherwise received, and readily account for the difference between this estimate of the Secretary and the actual deficiency, as well as for a continued deficit. Indeed, it must be confessed that we could hardly have had a more unfavorable period than the last two years for the collection of tariff revenue. We can not reasonably hope that our recuperation from this business depression will be sudden, but it has already set in with a promise of acceleration and continuance.

I believe our present tariff law, if allowed a fair opportunity, will in the near future yield a revenue which, with reasonably economical expenditures, will overcome all deficiencies. In the meantime no deficit that has occurred or may occur need excite or meantime no deficit that has occurred or may occur need excite or disturb us. To meet any such deficit we have in the Treasury, in addition to a gold reserve of one hundred millions, a surplus of more than $128,000,000 applicable to the payment of the expenses of the Government, and which must, unless expended for that purpose, remain a useless hoard, or, if not extravagantly wasted, must in any event be perverted from the purpose of its exaction from our people. The payment, therefore, of any deficiency in the revenue from this fund is nothing more than its proper and legitimate use. The Government, thus applying a surplus fortunately in its Treasury to the payment of expenses not met by its current revenues, is not at all to be likened to a man living beyond his income and thus incurring debt or encroaching on his principal. his income and thus incurring debt or encroaching on his principal.

It is not one of the functions of our Government to accumulate and make additions to a fund not needed for immediate expenditure. With individuals it is the chief object of struggle and effort. The application of an accumulated fund by the Government to the payment of its running expenses is a duty. An individual living beyond his income and embarrassing himself with debt, or drawing upon his accumulated fund of principal, is either unformake certain the rewards of labor and industry.

tunate or improvident. The distinction is between a government charged with the duty of expending for the benefit of the people and for proper purposes all the money it receives from any source, and the individual who is expected to manifest a natural desire to avoid debt or to accumulate as much as possible and to live within the income derived from such accumulations, to the end that they may be increased or at least remain unimpaired for the future use and enjoyment of himself or the objects of his love and affection who may survive him.

It is immeasurably better to appropriate our surplus to the payment of justifiable expenses than to allow it to become an invita-tion to reckless appropriations and extravagant expenditures. I suppose it will not be denied that under the present law our people obtain the necessaries of a comfortable existence at a cheaper people obtain the necessaries of a comfortable existence at a cheaper rate than formerly. This is a matter of supreme importance, since it is the palpable duty of every just government to make the burdens of taxation as light as possible. The people should not be required to relinquish this privilege of cheaper living except under the stress of their Government's necessity made plainly manifest. This reference to the condition and prospects of our revenues naturally suggests an allusion to the weakness and vices of our financial methods. They have been frequently pressed upon the attention of Congress in previous Executive communications and financial methods. They have been frequently pressed upon the attention of Congress in previous Executive communications and the inevitable danger of their continued toleration pointed out. Without now repeating these details, I can not refrain from again earnestly presenting the necessity of the prompt reform of a system opposed to every rule of sound finance and shown by experience to be fraught with the gravest peril and perplexity. The terrible civil war which shook the foundations of our Government more than thirty years ago brought in its train the destruction of property, the wasting of our country's substance, and the estrangement of brethren. These are now past and forgotten. Even the distressing loss of life the conflict entailed is but a sacred memory, which fosters patriotic sentiment and keeps alive a tender regard for those who nobly died. And yet there remains with us to-day. for those who nobly died. And yet there remains with us to-day, in full strength and activity, as an incident of that tremendous struggle, a feature of its financial necessities not only unsuited to our present circumstances, but manifestly a disturbing menace to business security and an ever-present agent of monetary distress.

Because we may be enjoying a temporary relief from its depressing influence, this should not lull us into a false security nor lead us to forget the suddenness of past visitations.

I am more convinced than ever that we can have no assured financial peace and safety until the Government currency obligations upon which gold may be demanded from the Treasury are withdrawn from circulation and canceled. This might be done, as has been heretofore recommended, by their exchange for longterm bonds bearing a low rate of interest or by their redemption with the proceeds of such bonds. Even if only the United States notes known as greenbacks were thus retired, it is probable that notes known as greenbacks were thus retired, it is probable that the Treasury notes issued in payment of silver purchases under the act of July 14, 1890, now paid in gold when demanded, would not create much disturbance, as they might, from time to time, when received in the Treasury by redemption in gold or otherwise, be gradually and prudently replaced by silver coin.

This plan of issuing bonds for the purpose of redemption certainly appears to be the most effective and direct path to the needed reform. In default of this, however, it would be a step in the right direction if currency obligations redeemable in gold.

needed reform. In default of this, however, it would be a step in the right direction if currency obligations redeemable in gold, whenever so redeemed, should be canceled instead of being reissued. This operation would be a slow remedy, but it would improve present conditions.

National banks should redeem their own notes. They should be allowed to issue circulation to the par value of bonds deposited as be reduced to one-fourth of 1 per cent.

In considering projects for the retirement of United States notes and Treasury notes issued under the law of 1890, I am of the opinion that we have placed too much stress upon the danger of contracting the currency, and have calculated too little upon the gold that would be added to our circulation if invited to us by better and safer financial methods. It is not so much a contraction of our currency that should be avoided as its unequal distribution.

This might be obviated, and any fear of harmful contraction at the same time removed, by allowing the organization of smaller banks and in less populous communities than are now permitted, and also authorizing existing banks to establish branches in small communities under proper restrictions.

The entire case may be presented by the statement that the day of sensible and sound financial methods will not dawn upon us until our Government abandons the banking business and the accumulation of funds, and confines its monetary operations to the receipt of the money contributed by the people for its support, and to the expenditure of such money for the people's benefit.

Our business interests and all good citizens long for rest from Another topic in which our people rightfully take a deep interest may be here briefly considered. I refer to the existence of trusts and other huge aggregations of capital, the object of which is to secure the monopoly of some particular branch of trade, industry, or commerce and to stifle wholesome competition. When these are defended it is usually on the ground that though they increase profits they also reduce prices and thus may benefit the public. It must be remembered, however, that a reduction of prices to the people is not one of the real objects of these organizations, nor is their tendency necessarily in that direction. If it prices to the people is not one of the real objects of these organiza-tions, nor is their tendency necessarily in that direction. If it occurs in a particular case it is only because it accords with the purposes or interests of those managing the scheme.

Such occasional results fall far short of compensating the palpable evils charged to the account of trusts and monopolies. Their tendency is to crush out individual independence and to hinder or tendency is to crush out individual independence and to hinder or prevent the free use of human faculties and the full development of human character. Through them the farmer, the artisan, and the small trader is in danger of dislodgment from the proud position of being his own master, watchful of all that touches his country's prosperity, in which he has an individual lot, and interested in all that affects the advantages of business of which he is a factor, to be relegated to the level of a mere appurtenance to a great machine, with little free will, with no duty but that of passive obedience, and with little hope or opportunity of rising in the scale of responsible and helpful citizenship.

To the instinctive belief that such is the inevitable trend of trusts

To the instinctive belief that such is the inevitable trend of trusts and monopolies is due the widespread and deep-seated popular aversion in which they are held and the not unreasonable insistence that, whatever may be their incidental economic advantages, their expectations are reported from the control of the contro their general effect upon personal character, prospects, and usefulness can not be otherwise than injurious.

Though Congress has attempted to deal with this matter by legislation, the laws passed for that purpose thus far have proved ineffective, not because of any lack of disposition or attempt to emforce them, but simply because the laws themselves as interpreted by the courts do not reach the difficulty. If the insufficiencies of existing laws can be remedied by further legislation it should be done. The fact must be recognized, however, that all Federal legislation on this subject may fall short of its purpose because of inherent obstacles, and also because of the complex character of our governmental system, which, while making the Federal authority supreme within its sphere, has carefully limited that sphere by metes and bounds which can not be transgressed. The decision of our highest court on this precise question renders it quite doubtful whether the evils of trusts and monopolies can be adequately treated through Federal action, unless they seek directly and purposely to include in their objects transportation or intercourse between States or between the United States and foreign countries. Though Congress has attempted to deal with this matter by United States and foreign countries

It does not follow, however, that this is the limit of the remedy that may be applied. Even though it may be found that Federal authority is not broad enough to fully reach the case, there can be no doubt of the power of the several States to act effectively in the premises, and there should be no reason to doubt their willingness to judiciously exercise such power.

In concluding this communication, its last words shall be an appeal to the Congress for the most rigid economy in the expenditure of the money it holds in trust for the people. The way to perplexing extravagance is easy, but a return to frugality is difficult. When, however, it is considered that those who bear the burdens of taxation have no guaranty of honest care save in the fidelity of their public servants, the duty of all possible retrenchment is plainly manifest.

When our differences are forgotten, and our contests of political opinion are no longer remembered, nothing in the retrospect of our public service will be as fortunate and comforting as the recollection of official duty well performed and the memory of a constant devotion to the interests of our confiding fellow-countrymen.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 7, 1896.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution for the annual meeting of Congress, the House of Representatives of the Fiftyfourth Congress assembled in their Hall for their second session The Chaplain of the House, Rev. H. N. Couden, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, we approach Thee in the attitude of prayer and devotion because we believe in Thee as not only the creator and upholder of all things but that Thou dost preside over the destiny of men and of nations. Hitherto Thou hast shaped the progress of our Union and made it strong and great. snaped the progress of our Union and made it strong and great. Continue, we beseech Thee, to guide our destiny, that the genius of our Republic may more and more obtain. May the harmony which prevails throughout our borders continue. Keep us ever in peace with all the world.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, D. C., December 7, 1896.

Mr. HULL. My motion simply is that so much of it as should go to the Committee on Military Affairs be referred to that committee, the same as the President's message will be referred to various committees, and to have a few additional copies printed.

Mr. CANNON. After all, it will be printed in the usual course in a day or two, will it not?

Mr. HULL. This resolution with reference to printing should go in now, so that there may be a few extra copies printed for the managers and the different Homes.

FREE USE OF ALCOHOL IN MANUFACTURES AND ARTS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the Joint Select Committee on the Use of Alcohol in the Manufactures and Arts submitted a report on yesterday, which, by error, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Ways and Means. I therefore ask that that reference be made.

The SPEAKER. There being no unfinished business on the Speaker's table, the next thing in order is a call of the standing committees for the consideration of bills. The call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Clerk will call the various committees in their order.

USE OF POSTAL CARDS.

Mr. LOUD (when the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to call up the bill H. R. 4157. It is on the House Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H.R.4157) to amend the postal laws relating to use of postal cards.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, it shall be lawful to transmit by mail, at the postage rate of a cent apiece, payable by stamps to be affixed by the sender, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, written messages on private mailing cards, such cards to be sent openly in the mails, to be no larger than the size fixed by the convention of the Universal Postal Union, and to be approximately of the same form, quality, and weight as the stamped postal card now in general use in the United States.

Mr. LOUD. - In my own time I ask that the report be read. It is a full explanation of this bill.

The report (by Mr. Loud) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4157) to amend the postal laws relating to use of postal cards, submit the following report:

Your committee present this bill upon the recommendation of the Post-Office Department and such careful investigation as we have been able to give the subject with the means at our command. We are satisfied at least that no possible harm can result from its passage, and from the best information in our possession it will tend to increase the use of the card system, and the Government will save the difference in cost between the postage stamp to be used and the postal card.

This system has been very successfully tried in England, and resulted in a very large increase of business.

While, of course, we recognize the fact that conditions may be different here, still, in view of the certainty that no harm can result from its enactment, and that it may tend to popularize the Post-Office Department, which should always be our aim within the lines of safety, we earnestly recommend its passage.

should always be our aim water. Some of the Postmaster-General its passage.

Your committee respectfully submit the views of the Postmaster-General expressed in his annual report, together with his letter recommending the passage of this bill.

Post-Office Department.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1896.

Washington, D. C., January 11, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose bill submitted to me by yourself a few days ago authorizing the use of private postal cards in the mails, and to say that I approve this bill, with the limitations contained in it.

On page 32 of my annual report for the year 1895 I called attention to the great success of the experiment in Great Britain and Ireland of the use of private postal cards, and suggested their adoption in this country as possibly meeting a public need and as relieving the Department itself of some of the expense of printing, storing, and handling of the present official cards. In the last report of the postmaster-general of Great Britain and Ireland it is stated that seven months after the adoption of the private postal card the number mailed increased from 248,000,000 to 312,750,000, being an increase of 28 per cent.

These cards should be issued under regulations prescribed by this Department, and should be of the same size and weight as the card issued by the Government, to facilitate their handling and transmission in the mails.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON,

WM. L. WILSON, Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. F. Loud, Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives, City.

The great success of the adoption of private post cards recited in the last report of the postmaster general of Great Britain and Ireland leads me to suggest their adoption in this country as meeting a possible public need, and as relieving the Department itself from some expense in the printing, storing, and handling of the present official cards. According to the report above referred to, in seven months after the adoption of the private post card the number mailed in Great Britain and Ireland increased from 248,500,000 to 312,750,000, being a difference of 26 per cent. The experiment would, therefore, seem to be well worth trying in our own country, and I recommend that authority for the use of private post cards in our mails be granted by Congress. Of course these cards should be of the same size and weight as the cards issued by the Government, and postage at the rate of 1 cent per card should be prepaid upon them.

Mr. LOUD. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss this matter, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what change it makes from the present system of the use of postal cards.

This will allow private individuals and business

Mr. LOUD. This will allow private individuals and business firms to use a private card of their own, conforming to the regulations as to size, etc. It will effect a saving to the Government, I will say, in that we will not have to manufacture the cards. The bill is recommended by the Department.

Mr. MoMILLIN. Do you think there is any danger of the revenues being impaired by the use of these postal cards?

Mr. LOUD. We have every reason to believe that it will increase the revenues very materially. That has been the experience in England, where the system has been in very successful operation for several years. It will save to the Government the cost of printing and transportation. It is a profitable part of the operations of the post-office business. The parties must affix a 1-cent postage stamp. Mr. RICHARDSON. What kind of advertisements can they

Mr. RICHARDSON. What kind of advertisements can they put on them? Did you explain that?

Mr. LOUD. No: the card must conform to present law in that respect. I will offer to amend this bill by inserting the words "ninety-seven," in line 4, instead of the words "ninety-six."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to amend by inserting in line 4 the words "ninety-seven," instead of the words "ninety-seven," instead of the words "ninety-six."

Mr. LOUD. This bill was to take effect on the 1st of July, 1896, which time has now passed.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Possibly a very decided charge.
Mr. LOUD. Do you desire to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?
Mr. DINGLEY. I make no objection to its consideration now,

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point of order that I should like to hear this discussion.

please be in order.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from California as to the value of the registered matter that is lost. What is the annual average?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know that I can inform the gentleman now. If he will listen to the reading of the report I think it will give full information as to the facts. It will give all the information in our possession. It gives the report of the Postmaster-General and his recommendation, which I will ask to have read in the commendation of the postmaster-filled factors.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4156) to amend the postal laws relating to loss of registered mail matter, submit the following report:

Limited indemnity in cases of lost registered mail matter, while new to this country, has been successfully demonstrated in most countries of Europe. Registration, we assume, is a most profitable branch of our postal service, and such steps as can be safely taken to bring it into more common use should be adopted, and after careful investigation of this subject we recommend the passage of the bill.

Following are the views of Postmasters-General Bissell and Wilson, together with letter of Postmaster-General Wilson recommending this measure, and statistics of registered mail matter lost during the past year:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL, Washington, D. C., January 14, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a bill submitted by you to me personally, proposing a limited indemnity for the loss of registered matter in the mails by an amendment of section 3926 of the Revised Statutes, and to say that the bill meets with the approval of this Department. It is in the line of the recommendations of my predecessor, and on page 32 of my annual report for the year 1895 the reasons for the enactment of such a law are stated.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON, Postmaster-General.

Hon. E. F. Loud, Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, House of Representatives, City.

[Report Postmaster-General Bissell.] INDEMNITY FOR LOST REGISTERED MATTER.

The Third Assistant Postmaster-General renews his recommendation of last year, for the enactment of a law under which indemnity, not to exceed $10 in any case, may be made for actual losses in the registered mails when recovery, after investigation, is found to be impossible.

It is his opinion that under such a law a considerable amount of revenue would be obtained from increased registrations and that the losses in the ordinary mails would be greatly reduced.

Such an indemnity is paid by all the principal foreign administrations. I recommend that the matter be laid before Congress.

[Report Postmaster-General Wilson.] LIMITED INDEMNITY FOR LOST REGISTERED MATTER.

LIMITED INDEMNITY FOR LOST REGISTERED MATTER.

In the report of last year, submitted by my predecessor, attention was called to the expediency of a law authorizing the payment of an indemnity, not exceeding $10$ in any case, for losses of registered matter in the mails.

I beg leave to renew this recommendation. It is part of the system of registration in most of the leading countries of the world, and would add to the popularity of our own system if adopted. It seems, besides, but equitable that after matter has been put into the mails, at an increased cost over ordinary matter, and with a special view to its security, the Government should, to a limited extent at least, guarantee its safety. In addition to this, I am of the opinion that such a modification of the system would prove so popular that in a short time nearly all valuable matter to be sent through the mails would be registered, so that but few losses would be likely to occur, and these could be much more satisfactorily investigated and located than is the case when losses occur in the ordinary mails. The saving to the Government in the investigation of such losses would probably more than repay it for the amount expended for indemnity.

This is a matter that will no doubt be brought before the Postal Union Congress, which is to meet in this city in 1897; but before that time a law should be enacted authorizing the introduction of this reform into our domestic postal system.

REGISTERED-MAIL LOSSES.

Five thousand two hundred and eighty complaints pertaining to the registered mail were received during the year. Of this number 2,513 alleged the rifling or abstraction of the contents of the letters or packages, and 2,302 announced the entire loss of the letter or package and contents. Only 19 complaints of carelessness by postal employees were received.

A comparison of the office records for the last two fiscal years shows that the total number of complaints affecting the registered mail during the fiscal year 1895 was less by 646 than the total number of complaints of the same character received during 1894, aratio of decrease of nearly 11 per cent. It is worthy of note that the total number of actual losses which occurred in the registered mail during the last fiscal year was 435 less than those determined during the previous year, or a decrease of a little more than 24 per cent. The statistics of the Department show that the employees of the postal service handled, approximately, 14,428,081 pieces of registered mail during the last fiscal year, with the inconsiderable loss of one piece in every 21,305 handled.

REGISTRATION STATISTICS.

The number of pieces of mail matter registered during the year was 14,428,081, of which 11,744,525 were paid registrations and 2,683,556 were official or free. This shows a falling off in paid registrations of 5.7 per cent. The decrease in the aggregate of fees collected is $57,353.04.

Mr. McMILLIN (during the reading of the report). Speaker, do I understand that the bill is up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. It is up for consideration.
Mr. McMILLIN. In strictness the consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. In strictness the consideration of this bill would have to be in Committee of the Whole, because it provides for fixing a liability upon the Government, and I should have made the point earlier but for the fact that owing to the confusion in the Hall I was unable to gather the full scope of the bill as it was read. I submit that the bill is really a very far-reaching one, inasmuch as it makes the Government liable for losses of registered mail matter, or authorizes the Postmaster-General to make regulations under which the Government shall be liable for such losses, and it strikes me that it is a bill of sufficient importance to losses, and it strikes me that it is a bill of sufficient importance to at least require very careful consideration.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to the bill being considered in Committee of the Whole, as I stated when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] rose to make the point a while ago. I do not, however, think that the bill is of such great importance as the gentlemen from Tennessee suggests.

Mr. DOCKERY. Bills on the Union Calendar are not in order under this call.

The SPEAKER. They are not. Is this bill on the Union Calendar?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; but the point is made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] that it ought to be there, inas-Mr. DOCKERY. much as it involves a liability, and possibly a very large liability, upon the Government. The bill seems to have been erroneously referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. I suppose the point of order ought to have been made before discussion was entered upon. It would now seem to come too late.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think there was some sort of understanding that the rule would not be insisted on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] states that he would be very willing to have the bill discussed in Committee of the Whole, but at the present stage of the proceeding that would require unanimous consent.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from California is strictly within the rule. The bill seems to have been erroneously referred to the House Calendar, but, being on that Calendar, it would of course be entitled to consideration in this hour. The trouble is that the bill was erroneously referred, and in that way was made in order at this time. The suggestion of the Chair would probably meet the difficulty.

Mr. LOUD. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker, to accede to any reasonable suggestion that may be made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask consent that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if it was brought up in that way it ought to be brought up at the end of this hour. The Chair thinks that to bring up bills in this hour and then go into Committee of the Whole would make confusion in the practice of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the Chair is quite right, and I will therefore defer the request until the expiration of this hour. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that under a strict construction of the rule, the point of order not having been made when the gentleman from California asked for the consideration of the bill, he is entitled to have it considered at this time. Realizing that, I did not make the point of order that the bill could not be considered in this hour, because the House had already entered upon its consideration. made my suggestion merely to call attention to the provisions of the bill, believing that when attention was called to it the House would be disposed to give the measure the careful consideration that it seems to require.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman from Tennessee did say

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman from Tennessee did say that he would have made the point of order in time if he had been able to hear the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. As the consideration of the bill has been begun, perhaps it may as well go on. The gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] desires to have the report read in full.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill as

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, an investigation of the registration branch of the Post-Office will show that we are gradually losing our registration business, while we are still maintaining the expen-sive machinery which that branch of the postal service demands. The express companies throughout the country, which guarantee indemnity in case of loss, are gradually absorbing all this class of business, which was formerly done by the Post-Office Department, and to those who have looked into the matter it seems quite clear that the time has arrived when we ought either to go out of the registration business or else provide some such system as is here registration business or else provide some such system as is here proposed, whereby the people may have a guaranty of the safety of such matter as they confide to the charge of the Department, or some measure of indemnity for its loss. The Government charges a very liberal fee for registration for packages and letters, 8 cents, and the registration department is one of the most profitable branches of the service. For several years past Postmasters-General have called the attention of Congress to the necessity of providing for some limited indemnity for losses incurred by persons who send registered matter through the mails. Now, on the basis of the packages lost in the year 1895 (and the amount of loss upon packages is being continually reduced) it would have cost this Government not more than $25,000 had we paid $10 for every package that was lost.

The Post-Office Department is becoming more perfect in its operations day by day—more careful in the execution of its business; and, as I have remarked, the number of lost packages is decreasing year by year. We therefore have no right to assume that the ratio will increase. But we do assume that if we can give a guaranty of the safe delivery of matter confided to the care of the Post-Office Department our registration business will increase to the extent not merely of $25,000 a year, but $50,000 or $75,000 a year, and of this amount at least one-half would be clear profit to the Government.

Mr. QUIGG. May I inquire of the gentleman from California whether it is proposed to charge a fee for the insurance which this bill proposes in connection with the registration?

Mr. LOUD. No additional fee—nothing more than is charged at present. We charge now a fee of 8 cents for registration; and we do not guarantee in any manner the delivery of the matter thus confided to the mails.

Mr. QUIGG. And it is proposed to insure the safe delivery of this mail matter for no additional fee?

Mr. LOUD. That is what is proposed.
Mr. QUIGG. Now, I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that on the registration of last year, had this bill been in force as a law, the United States would have been liable (if I understand aright the figures before me) to the extent of $117,000,000.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman repeat that statement?

Mr. QUIGG. The Postmaster-General in this report says that the number of pieces of mail matter registered by paid registra-tion was 11,744,525. Now, if the Government had been liable— Mr. LOUD. That is, if all those pieces of registered matter had been lost

Mr. QUIGG. Yes; if they had all been lost— Mr. LOUD. I should prefer, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is

Mr. LOUD. I should prefer, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to make a speech.

Mr. QUIGG. I am not going to make a speech. I merely wish, with the permission of the gentleman from California, to call the attention of the House to the rather serious character of the insurance which this bill proposes. I have no doubt that a bill could be drawn which would amply justify any responsibility which the Government may assume

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman wishes to discuss the bill I will yield to him. How much time does he wish?

Mr. QUIGG. I do not know that I want more than two or three minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield the gentleman five minutes, if he wishes to occupy that much time.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, it appears from this statement of the Postmaster-General that had this bill been in operation during the last year as a law the United States would have been liable on the registered business of that year to the extent of $117,000,000. Of course, it is not supposable that any considerable proportion of this registered mail matter would have been lost; but it does appear that 5,280 complaints were made in reference to registered packages that went astray. This means that under a bill of this kind we should have been liable on these complaints to the extent of $52,800.

Now, if it were proposed to charge an additional fee which would reimburse the Government to the extent of the loss which may be expected to occur, such legislation would seem to be entirely justifiable. But if it is proposed to make the Government liable without enabling it to recoup its necessary loss—because there must inevitably be a certain amount of loss—I shall have to vote against the bill.

It seems to me there ought to be in the bill a provision authorizing the Postmaster-General, in establishing this uniform system of registration, to require an additional fee whenever the sender of registered matter may wish the Government to insure him. I hope the gentleman from California will embody in his bill such a provision. I should think that anybody who may wish to send through the mails a package, valuable even to the extent of $5, would willingly pay an additional fee of five or ten cents. Under such a system the Government would have some chance of getting back the money which it must pay upon these losses.

The gentleman from California is continually reminding Congress of the fact that there exists in the postal business of the Government a large deficit—that our expenditures for that service are, I believe, nine or ten million dollars ahead of our receipts, yet is in danger by this bill of increasing the deficit in the sum of $50,000, more or less.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.
Mr. LOUD. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.
How much time does he desire?

Mr. BINGHAM. About five minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. BINGHAM. The remarks of the gentleman from New York, predicated upon a statement of the obligations of the Government, presuppose the absolute loss of every package carried in the registered mail, making such obligation amount to 15,000,000, Should the gentleman's argument be seriously considered by the House, it would be in conflict with the statistical basis upon which all our life-insurance companies and great express companies proceed in carrying on their business. Both these classes of corporations assume in the transaction of their business obligations and liabilities in excess of any supposable loss by the death of the insured parties or by the loss of packages carried by express.

Mr. QUIGG. But of course those companies charge a fee for the obligation which they assume.

Mr. BINGHAM. They charge their regular commission, as we charge in registration of mail matter the regular fee of 8 cents on charge in registration of mail matter the regular fee of 8 cents on each parcel, which presupposes that, by reason of the care in the transmission of the vast amount of mail carried, the loss bears a very small relation to that amount. I will give the gentleman the figures from the report. The International Postal Union, five years ago, asked that the Government of the United States might, in accord with the governments of the rest of the world, give an indemnity for such losses as those covered by this bill. We did not do it, and, although that has been the recommendation of the various officials of the Department during the last five years, this is the first legislative expression which has been presented to carry out that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a word as to the figures involved in this legislation. The registration fees received by the Department during the last fiscal year amounted to $975,388.88. Of this year amount, the work accomplished covered the handling of fifteen millions and upward of pieces of mail matter, of which the Government transported free through the mails 2,913,000 pieces of registered matter.

Let us come to the practical phase of this question. The pending bill proposes that indemnity shall be allowed to the loser of registered mail matter not to exceed $10 on any one piece. What, then, are the losses which have heretofore occurred in this branch of the service? The complaints from all sources during the last fiscal year amounted to 5,817. Of this number, 4,501 complaints were fully investigated, and 1,316 were in process of investigation, but not yet completed at the close of the year.

How did these losses occur? Losses chargeable to the burning and wrecking of post-offices and postal cars and steamboats and minor unavoidable accidents, 1,155; losses chargeable to depredations by postal officials, 190; losses through postal employees, from other causes than theft, 122; losses resulting from depredations by outside parties, 231, and losses the responsibility for which could not be fixed, 152.

The Third Assistant Postmaster-General, in his report with reference to this subject, says:

Of the foregoing case

Those I have just citedrecoveries were made and the value of the lost articles restored to the owners as follows:

Through the Dead-Letter Office	244
Through outside parties and direct to losers	730	998
Number of cases in which recovery was impossible		852

Assuming that this proportion will be the same in the cases yet to be investigated, the number of actual losses will reach 1,101, or 1 in every 13,721 pieces tigated, the number of actual losses whitecan appear and the registered.

Of the 852 cases of irrecoverable loss, 232 involved official matter, such as postage stamps and stamped paper dispatched to postmasters, leaving 620 private losses only, or 1 in every 24,365 pieces registered. As compared with the previous year, there was an increase in the number of losses, due mainly to a greater number of accidents, such as the burning of post-offices, postal cars, etc., the total for 1896 being 1,155, as against 625 for 1885.

There was a very great reduction in the number of losses through the care-lessness or ignorance of postal employees—that is to say, through other causes than criminal misconduct—the total being only 122, as against 258 for the previous year. This indicates an improvement in the general efficiency of the service.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, should this law be placed upon the statute books and the Government be made responsible for the maximum amount, $10, in each case of these losses (and there are many cases where the maximum loss would be very much less), there will be but little over 600 cases of loss for which the Government would be responsible, although this legislation would apply to and cover the transmission of upward of 15,000,000 pieces of mail matter.

Mr. QUIGG. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that would not be a question for judicial interpretation? There is a liability in every one of such cases. Now, if the liability shall be fixed by statute, it is a matter for the courts to determine whether the Government shall pay $10 or any other sum.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman from New York that the same rules of investigation would apply in this case as apply in all losses relating to the postmaster by robbery and depredation up to a fixed limit. The Department adjudicates the loss; and the Postmaster-General, having the administration of this law, and being authorized to fix rules and regulations, would provide and the Postmaster-General, having the administration of this law, and being authorized to fix rules and regulations, would provide some similar rules for the adjudication of such losses as this. That is the case when there has been a loss by depredation or otherwise of postal funds; and the regulations, coming from the same source, will be equally critical to protect the Government under the operation of this bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not true that the bill is protected—or the Government protected—from the fact that the granting of an indemnity to the extent suggested in case of loss to the persons sending registered mail matter would increase largely the registration fees, and would be an absolute source of revenue to the Government, even if the adoption of this measure had the effect suggested by the gentlemen from New York?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the experience of every government hich has tried this system.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LOUD. I will yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.
Mr. DOCKERY. I shall not occupy but two or three minutes, as I only wish to ask the gentleman a question.

This seems to be a measure to put the business of registration by the Post-Office Department in competition with the business of the express companies; and so far as that can be safely accomplished, within the limits of our revenues, I favor it. But in order to intelligently accomplish our purpose we should know exactly what the express companies charge for a similar service. Mr. Speaker, I can readily understand how this bill may increase the business of registration for all packages under $10; but I am utterly unable to see how it will enlarge the scope of our business for packages exceeding $10 in value. If I am correctly advised, the express companies have a schedule of fees. That is advised, the express companies have a schedule of fees. That is to say, they charge a much less fee for the transmission of $10 than for the transmission of $100. This bill puts all the registered mail of the Government on the same basis, so far as liability is concerned; and while it may materially increase the transmission of small sums of money, it seems that it will simply advertise the fact to the country that we do not guarantee any amount in excess of $10, and the result will be that the Government will do the small business while the express companies will do the leavest the small business while the express companies will do the larger business Mr. BINGHAM. That is all the Post-Office Department wants to do.

Mr. DOCKERY. If that is true, then this bill will exactly accomplish the object sought by the Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. Undoubtedly. I will state to the gentleman that the whole purpose is outside of the line of what we call the carrying of the mail. This is an addendum of a line of work in the Post-Office Department independent of the transmission of mails, just like your money-order system. It will be a great convenience to the people in localities where they can not have express conveniences.

Mr. DOCKERY. When the gentleman refers to the moneyorder system he should remember that our liability is limited, under any single money order, to $100; but there is no limitation as to the amount which may be transmitted in a registered package.

as to the amount which may be transmitted in a registered package. Such is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. BINGHAM. None that I know of, only that practically the registered mail is not a very valuable mail. People do not send things of great value by registered mail.

Mr. DOCKERY. Practically that may be true, but still there is no law limiting a registered package to any maximum amount.

Mr. BINGHAM. None whatever.

Mr. DOCKERY. Therefore, as a matter of fact, as I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], we do compete for the transportation of money packages without regard to amount.

Mr. BINGHAM. Small sums.
Mr. DOCKERY. Practically it may be limited to small amounts, but as a matter of fact we have no limit.

Mr. BINGHAM. No limit other than a man's common sense,

Mr. BINGHAM. No limit other than a man's common sense, If he is going to send a thousand dollars to some part of the country, he will not send it through the mail.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; and the express companies transmit larger amounts. Why? Because, although the sender pays an increased fee for the transmission of larger amounts of money, he is secured for the entire amount. Now, then, comes the Government and advertises to the country that for 8 cents we will guarantee the safe transmission of all amounts not exceeding $10, but that the Government will not be liable for an amount in excess of $10.

excess of $10. Mr. HALL. Mr. HALL. I will say to my colleague, if he will allow me to interrupt him, that the insurance under this bill does not apply exclusively to the amounts under $10. It applies to all amounts.

his is a ten-dollar insurance. This is a ten-dollar insurance.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the actual amount is paid if it is less than $10, as I understood the reading of the bill. I am not prepared to say that this is not a wise bill, but it does seem to me that the House ought to be in possession of information which up to this moment has not been given us.

Mr. QUIGG. Does the gentleman from Missouri happen to know what the charge of other governments is?

Mr. DOCKERY. I was just coming to that point, and I am obliged to the gentleman from New York for the suggestion. The report states that other governments have this system of registration, that is, a limited guaranty system.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, in order to determine whether or not we should follow the system the House should know what the system is, whether they have a fixed fee, as we have—that is, 8 cents without regard to the amount transmitted, or whether they have a schedule of fees. If I understand the reading of the report of the Postmaster-General, the income of the Government from registered mail amounted last year to $975,000. This bill carries a liability, or at least a probable liability, on the basis of the business of last year of $50,000, as I understood the gentleman from New York.

Mr. QUIGG. Fifty thousand dollars; that is true.
Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am so accustomed to following the able and economical lead of my friend from California [Mr. Loud] that I will not depart from that custom in this case; and yet I venture to suggest simply that this bill involves a great many doubts as to its propriety.

Mr. BINGHAM. Where does the gentleman get his estimate of 50,000? The private losses last year were 620.

Mr. QUIGG. It appeared from the report that I read that there were complaints of losses of paid registration—I so understand it—in 5,200 cases.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is, complaints?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes. Mr. BINGHAM. But now give me the result of the investiga-

Mr. QUIGG. The result of the investigation will be whatever the courts fix

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, after investigation of the cases on the part of the Department, he can see that last year there were 5,817 cases—the gentleman understands?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Fifty-eight hundred and seventeen complaints?

Mr. QUIGG. Yes. Mr. BINGHAM. After investigation of the 852 cases of irrev-cable loss. All other cases had been covered, 232 involving official matter, such as postage stamps and stamped paper dispatched to postmasters, leaving 620 cases of private loss. The gentleman understands?

understands?

Mr. QUIGG. I do not think there is any difference between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself. I only seek to point out to the House that complaints were made that involved liability on last year's business of 50,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Complaints?

Mr. QUIGG. Now, as to how they will be adjudicated under this bill, that is another question; but it does seem to me we certainly ought to know something of the experience of other countries. this bill, that is another question; but it does seem to me we certainly ought to know something of the experience of other countries as to this form of insurance, as to whether our fee is adequate. That it is going to involve a cost there can be no question.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very small.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says "very small." It is probable, but not inevitable, that it may be very large. We are going to have a certain amount of loss.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from New York, What do you do for this $957,000 of additional revenue to your Department or Government?

Department or Government?
Mr. QUIGG. We take, as I understand, special care of these letters

Mr. BINGHAM. Under a system of receipts.

Mr. QUIGG. And that especial care is what is paid for. Now it is proposed, in addition to taking especial care, that we shall offer to reimburse the sender or owner of the package that may be claimed to have been lost to the extent of $10 per package. Now, are we going to charge a sufficient fee for the risk that is incurred?

Mr. BINGHAM. Of which the gentleman states the maximum is 50,000.

Mr. QUIGG. Now, I consider that bad business, especially—Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will allow me right there, the report of the Postmaster-General shows that there is a revenue of $970,000 a year from this registration service. Now, where the Government receives such a benefit as that, does not the gentleman think, in fair dealings, that this loss of individuals should be paid, especially where it is such a minimum figure as he himself has expressed; and will not the increase of business that the Government will get from this be an absolute source of revenue, even in view of all the bad results he is picturing here?

Mr. QUIGG. It may be so, Mr. Speaker,
Mr. HOPKINS. In other words, this bill will divert these small packages from the express companies to the Government, and the Government will get 8 cents for their delivery.

Mr. QUIGG. I do not know that that is a very suitable business for the Government to engage in. nue of $970,000 a year from this registration service. Now, where

Mr. HOPKINS. Why not?

Mr. QUIGG. I am not one of those who are in favor of diverting business from private institutions to the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. Right there let me ask the gentleman-

Mr. QUIGG. I do not want to get off on that subject; but, in answer to the gentleman's proposition, I want to say that I think the Government does a little too much of that sort of thing

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will allow me right there, this legislation is in the interest of the people. There are hundreds and thousands of people that avail themselves of the laws that exist to-day. Experience has taught us that it is in the interest of the people, and in the interest of cheap transportation as to a certain line of packages.

Now, speaking for myself, I believe that this kind of legislation is beneficial that results in the greatest good to the greatest num-ber, even if it does trespass a little on the rights of a company like an express company.

Mr. QUIGG. But here is the point: We are already nine millions short in our receipts from postal business. We have got that deficit to make up anyhow. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and other gentlemen propose to make it up, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] well knows, by limiting the operation of the present laws, by to an extent repealing them and forbidding the use of the mails to some of those who now enjoy that need I am not alternate allowed to the contract of the contrac I am not altogether clear as to whether something of that use. I am not atogether clear as to whether something of that kind ought not to be done; but here is a proposition to increase our inevitable loss. I do not say that it will increase it very much. I say that it may increase it very much, while we shall obtain no additional revenue whatever except a speculative one, which may possibly result from drawing business from the express companies. I think the gentleman from California ought at least to tell us whether we are running in this matter any greater risk than other governments run who do the same kind of business. For instance, what are the governments that do this business and what do they charge for it? Will the gentleman from California give us that information?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman from New York seems to be very solicitous about this little deficiency of nine millions, yet there is no man in this House who has been a stronger advocate of the very system which causes a deficiency in our postal receipts, and I believe he is an advocate of it to-day. I believe, and the officials of the Post-Office Department have believed for years, that a measure like the one now pending will increase the receipts of the Government. I have never stood on this floor advocating any measure that would tend to enlarge the deficiency in the postal service, and I hope that I shall never occupy any such position.

I wish the gentleman from New York could assert the same for himself. Now, let us get back to the measure under consideration.

Mr. GROSVENOR. While the gentleman is on the floor I want to ask him a question, if he has no objection, in order to get at what is in this bill.

Mr. LOUD. That is just what I am trying to do.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman this question:
Would the effect of this bill, if it should become a law, be to permit the sender of registered mail matter to register it without communicating any information to the Postmaster-General, or to anybody else, as to its contents?

Mr. LOUD. I am surprised at the gentleman from Ohio, ripe as he is in age and rich in experience, asking a question of that character.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I asked it for information.

Mr. LOUD. The Post-Office Department has been managed in the past, and I believe it will be managed under the incoming Administration, by men entirely competent to manage its affairs judiciously, and I believe that under the next Administration sufficient judgment and discretion will be applied to the conduct of the Post-Office Department to protect the interests of the Government. It is within the power of the Postmaster-General under this bill, and under all our laws relating to the Post-Office Department to protect the interests of the Government.

partment, to prescribe such rules and regulations as may seem to him proper and necessary to protect the Government.

I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the registration fee which we now charge will produce a sufficient fund to guarantee the limited incharge will produce a sufficient fund to guarantee the limited indemnity that is proposed. If gentlemen will look at the report accompanying this bill they will see that last year the falling off in registration fees alone was $57,000. I have already stated that our registration system is the most profitable portion of the business of the Department, and the more successfully we can regulate it so that the masses of the people will patronize it the more we shall increase the receipts of the Government in that branch of the public service. The falling off in registration fees last year was $57,000, and the profit on that business if it had been done by the Department would more than meet all the losses that occurred during the year. It appears that there was a loss of over 5 000 during the year. It appears that there was a loss of over 5,000 packages, and the gentleman from New York bases his calculation on the assumption that every one of those packages was worth $10. I think it would be safe to assume, judging from the experience of the Department, that these packages did not average $1 in value, and I do not believe that the losses, as the Department is

In value, and I do not believe that the losses, as the Department is run to-day and as it must continue to be run, will amount to over $10,000 a year; while, on the other hand, the change here proposed will bring a large increase of profitable business.

The Post-Office Committee have given this matter serious consideration, not alone during this Congress, but in previous Congresses, and gentlemen who have investigated the subject are unanimous in support of this bill. I repeat, that the Postmasters-General for the last sixteen years have advocated the passage of a measure of this character. There is no possible danger in it, and, as I said when I began, we should either go out of the registration business entirely or regulate it in such a manner that it will commend itself to the people generally. Registration, as gentlemen understand, is to a great extent intended for the accommodation of the people in places where there are no express offices, dation of the people in places where there are no express offices, no money-order offices, and no other means of sending packages with safety except by registered mail.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to supplement his statement with some official figures?

Mr. LOUD. I will yield to the gentleman a moment for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] states that there were upward of 5,000 complaints last year. Conceded. They were complaints as to the loss of registered matter, just such complaints as the gentleman makes when his letters are not delivered at the proper time or at the proper place. But the gentleman from New York predicates his argument as to the amount of the losses, which he puts at $50,000, on the assumption that in every case the lost package contained something of large value, and that none of the missing packages were recovered. Now, let me give him the official figures— Now, let me give him the official figures—
Mr. LOUD. We might concede that every package contained something of value and that 10,000 were lost, and still we should have a strong case.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, let me give the official figures.

Mr. LOUD. I am willing to admit that all the registered parcels contain articles of value.

Mr. BINGHAM. Upon 15,000,000 of transmissions there were Mr. BINGHAM. Upon 15,000,000 of transmissions there were something over 5,000 complaints, of which 1,850 were found to involve actual losses. Of the 1,850 cases of loss, 852 were found to be impossible to adjudicate; 232 involved official matter; there were only 620 cases of private loss, so that $6,200 would have been the absolute loss of the Department last year on this class of business (if a law of this kind had been in operation) as against a revenue of $975,000. revenue of $975,000.

Mr. FOOTE. If this bill should pass, would not the liability of the Government in case of loss be less than that of a common carrier in similar cases?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know about that; probably it would.
Mr. FOOTE. In the case of a common carrier—an express company, for instance—the party suffering loss has a right of action against the company. Why should there not be a similar liability on the part of the Government?

Mr. HEPBURN rose. Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, how much is there remaining of the hour?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa

[Mr. HEPBURN]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the relief proposed to be given by this bill is exceedingly inconsiderable. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] tells us that, measured by the experience of the Government during the last year, the cases in which indemnity would have to be paid by the Government under a law of this kind would probably number a little more than 600, so that the actual amount paid as indemnity would be at most only about $6,000. If reimbursement should be made by the Government in all the cases in which complaints were made, the amount would be less than $50,000. Such reimbursement, however, would be paid by the General Government out of a general fund made by the fees of 8 cents each on packages of registered matter. Now, I should like to know why a man who sends a package valued at $10,10 should be obliged to contribute to this fund with no possibility of reimbursement to him, while a man who sends a registered package valued at $10 would receive reimbursement. If we are going to do anything of this kind at all, is it not wise to do it in such a way that each of the 11,000,000 of the contributors to this fund should in case of loss be a beneficiary? It might be done if the gentleman would consent to this amendment which I desire to propose:

Amend by striking out all of lines 11, 12 and 13 down to and including the word "dollars," in line 14, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"And the Post-Office Department may charge a fee for such service equal to 1 per cent of the value of the package registered; but the liability of the Government shall not exceed the value of the package; and in no case more than $100 on one package."

Under such a provision all senders of registered matter would be alike beneficiaries. I think such a provision would be much the House may see fit to put upon it.

more just than the present provision. It would relieve the bill from a just criticism, to which I think it is now subject—that in the first place the measure in its present form amounts really to nothing; and in the second place that it gives to a man sending a package worth $10 a benefit which it withholds from a man sendpackage worth $10 a beneat which it withholds from a man sending a package worth $11, notwithstanding the fact that all those who send registered matter must, by paying a fee of 8 cents on each package, contribute to the fund out of which reimbursement is to be made to this small number.

Mr. LOUD. They all now have to contribute their 8 cents per package without the possibility of getting back anything in case

Mr. HEPBURN. It is true that they do not now get anything; but under my amendment all will enjoy a like benefit; the law will give no special privilege to anyone.

Mr. LOUD. Will not every person in fact pay 10 cents for the guaranty? Mr. HEPBURN. If 1 per cent is too much, make it less; but let the benefits of this measure apply to all.

let the benefits of this measure apply to an.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] will allow me a moment, I wish to say that I approve in the main the suggestions of the gentleman from Iowa. This bill is a radical departure from the business principles which the Government applies to the money-order system. In that branch of the postal service the Government transmits money by draft, and the compensation paid in each case is based on the amount of the draft. For a draft of less than $2.50 the fee is 3 cents; for a draft of $10 the charge is greater; and for a draft of $100 still greater. In the business of registering mail we do not furnish drafts, but actually transmit money; and in all cases exactly the same fee is charged without any regard to the valuation of the

Now, then, if the system is to be extended by a limited-liability clause, it seems to me there ought to be some schedule of fees based on the value of mail matter transported. I think the bill based on the value of mail matter transported. I think the bill looks in the right direction, but it needs some amendments covering the point suggested by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LOUD. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that money, as a rule, is not transmitted in registered letters.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a mere matter of detail. I only wanted to invite the attention of the House to what I think is a defect in the proposed bill.

Mr. QUIGG. May I call the attention of the gentleman from California to the eighth line of the bill, which provides that the Postmaster-General may provide rules under which the senders or owners of registered mail matter which has been lost shall be or owners of registered mail matter which has been lost shall be indemnified? That opens, I would suggest to him, a very wide field of legislation in the hands of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. LOUD. No wider than is open already by law, permit me to say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to finish this bill, if possible, within the hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes and a half

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes and a half of his time remaining.

Mr. LOUD. I will say, then, Mr. Speaker, that there is hardly time to yield to anybody in that brief period. I would like to come to a vote if possible, although the question looks a little doubtful since this discussion has sprung up.

I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] that he is entering into a scientific field which probably, if he were revising the postal laws, he would advocate, and he would find me one of his strongest supporters in favor of such a modification. But we are taking a position with reference to matters as we find them, and are endeavoring to make this legislation fit we find them, and are endeavoring to make this legislation fit existing conditions.

This system of registration has been in vogue for very many years. Formerly we charged a fee of 10 cents for registration. In late years it has been reduced to 8 cents. I think the objection of the gentleman from Iowa, if he will allow me, is rather techor the gentleman from lowa, it he will allow me, is rather technical than otherwise. Every person who sends a package by registered mail receives just the same benefit as any other person. That is the standpoint from which to view such registration. If you insure a house, and it does not burn down, you have been guaranteed during the time of the insurance that if it did burn down you would be compensated to the extent of the insurance. Now, perhaps you would be as fortunate if the house did not burn down as if it did burn down. Perhaps the person who did not lose his package after it was registered is as fortunate and receives just as much benefit as he who does lose a package. It is simply an insurance, or rather a guaranty, that the package shall be delivered, and therefore the gentleman's objections, it seems to me, are rather technical than otherwise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like, if possible, to bring this matter to a vote before the expiration of the hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that there is no limitation to the morning hour except that which

Mr. LOUD. I understand that, Mr. Speaker; but I understand that I lose control of the bill after the first hour.

Mr. BLUE. If the gentleman from California has more time, or can secure more time, I would like a few moments myself.

Mr. LOUD. If the House desires to further discuss the matter,

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended for one hour, or so much as he may desire to use, and then he can yield to other gentlemen who wish to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUD. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas for ten minutes, or so much time as he may desire.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, this measure is of such consequence to the public that it is entitled to the fairest and fullest possible Consideration by the House.

It is a popular belief with a great many people of the United States that a registered package is safe, and that the Government guarantees indemnity. That is an erroneous conviction. The gentleman from California speaks of this 8-cent fee paid for the registration of each package as being an indemnity and a protection, but it reaches no further than simply the support of the Department, and has no reference, as the law now stands, to any indemnity that the Government gives to the parties who send registered packages. It is a well-known fact that in very many registered packages. It is a well-known fact that in very many localities throughout the nation neither a post-office order can be cashed nor an express package conveniently delivered.

If this bill becomes a law it will carry benefits wherever the Post-Office Department can reach. It is in the right direction, The statistics furnished here show conclusively that the loss even under the present system is comparatively small. The indemnities which the Government will be called upon to furnish will, it seems to me, be insignificant. The revenue in excess of that received under the present system will be great. The benefits that the public will receive will also be large. It will enable very many people of the nation to transact their business at a much less expense than they would otherwise be subjected to under the less expense than they would otherwise be subjected to under the

The Post-Office Department is peculiarly in the interest of all the people of the nation, and this measure, if amended as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, will bring to the Government, by reason of this additional fee, ample revenue to protect this service, and will save to the people very many dollars in the transaction of their business. It ought to be amended in some such way as that suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, and, so amended, ought to pass.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to be heard, I do not wish any further time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

The question being on the passage of the bill,
Mr. QUIGG demanded a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 13.
Accordingly the bill was passed.
On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DELIVERY OF LETTERS IN CERTAIN CASES.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] desire to call up any further matter from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

on the Post-Omce and Post-Roads?

Mr. LOUD. I supposed that the hour had expired. I was given an additional hour. I have another bill here which the committee have directed me to call up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is at liberty to call up bills from his committee until the morning hour expires.

Mr. LOUD. Very well, then. I will follow the direction of the committee and call up the bill (H. K. 5473) concerning the delivery of letters in towns, villages, and other places where no free delivery

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill. The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever not less than twenty persons who receive their mail matter through the same post-office shall petition the postmaster at such office to appoint one or more letter carriers, who shall be at least 16 years of age, for the delivery of letters and other mail matter therefrom to the persons addressed, at their respective residences or places of business, and for the collection of letters and the conveyance and delivery of them to the post-office, said postmaster shall appoint a suitable number of letter carriers for that purpose, and it shall be their duty to report at least once a week to the postmaster appointing them the number of pieces delivered and collected by them and amount paid therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is this bill on the House Calendar?
Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that it should be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LOUD. I believe it is properly on the House Calendar. do not think it entails any charge on the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems to involve a liability on the Government; and if so, should be considered in the usual way.

The SPEAKER. It can not be considered in the morning hour if it should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOUD. There is no liability against the Government under this bill. I do not approve of the bill myself.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does it not involve the right to increase the letter-carrier force without limit?

Mr. DINGLEY. But it is to be at the expense of the persons

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the bill is properly on the House Calendar.

Mr. LOUD. There is no charge on the Government, as I understand it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is that particularly expressed in the bill?
Mr. LOUD. I think it is sufficiently expressed. I think it is emphatically stated that there shall be no liability against the Government

Mr. DALZELL. Who pays for the delivery? Mr. LOUD. The individuals served.

The SPEAKER. The payment is to be made by the recipients of the mail. That seems to be the case.
Mr. LOUD. Has the reading of the

Mr. LOUD. Has the reading of the bill been completed? The SPEAKER. No; the Clerk will proceed. The Clerk proceeded to read the remainder of the bill, as fol-

Sec. 3. That the letter carriers appointed by authority of this act shall be subject to all the provisions of existing laws not inconsistent with this act.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will yield the time of the committee to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Sperry].
Mr. Sperry. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.
The report (by Mr. Sperry) was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. SPERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. $473) for the purpose of authorizing delivery and collection of mail in towns, villages, and other places where mail matter is not delivered to residences or places of business, submit the following report:

Your committee have given this matter due and careful consideration, and have unanimously come to the conclusion that the bill presented is just and proper and ought to pass.

The bill provides that whenever not less than twenty persons who receive their mail through the same office shall petition to have their mail delivered and collected, it shall then be the duty of the postmaster to appoint such persons as are willing to undertake the delivery and collection of mail in towns or places where no free delivery exists. The committee are of the opinion that when such a request is made from the people of any village or town their request should be granted.

The bill further provides that the letter carriers so appointed shall be over 16 years of age, and that said letter carriers may make an agreement with the persons to whom such mail matter is delivered or collected for such compensation as may be agreed upon, and when no compensation is agreed upon such letter carriers may receive 1 cent for the delivery of each piece of mail matter, and they may demand and receive at least 1 cent for each package and letter they may collect and convey to the post-office. Such compensation shall be in full for all services, and none of such carriers shall have any claim upon the Post-Office Department for compensation for services thus rendered. No letter or other mail matter shall be delivered by the post-office for the delivery of mail to such letter carrier. The letter carrier so appointed shall give bonds for the faithful performance of his duty.

The bill appears to the committee a reasonable and proper one. It is substantially like the ol subject that there is no good reason why such accommodations should be withheld. It will take some time before the full result of this system can be reached, but when the time comes it will be of incalculable value to all who avail themselves of the benefits of this act.

It is easy to see how this will elevate the standard of intelligence and promote the welfare of the people. The question of delivery of mail in rural districts is being discussed throughout the country, and the demand is daily growing. Each house where mail is being delivered and collected can have a little box put up as a receptacle of mail delivered or to be collected, and the committee see no objection to the establishment of such postal facilities by neighborhood agreement, but much good resulting therefrom.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by myself during the first session of this Congress, at the request of a large number of people of my own State and at the solicitation of farming communities in other States.

The idea is a very simple one. The bill itself fully explains the subject, and if there is anything which is not made clear by the language of the bill itself it is set forth in the report of the committee. The idea is simply this: There are large farming communities, villages, and towns with inhabitants not exceeding 10,000. When the number of inhabitants does not reach 10,000, then the free-delivery system is inoperative in such communities. It seems to me that we should give all the people possible the advantage of the system and not stop at a certain mark, to wit. 10,000 inhabit-ants, with a certain income at the local post-office, and say we will not go over that line. There are large numbers of farming communities, and there are a large number of villages whose inhabitants would like to make a request to the postmaster that he appoint a letter carrier to distribute their mail, the letter carrier having the right to enter upon the floor of the post-office and there separate mail and take it to the residences of those who make the request. Under the present law the postmaster himself can deliver it to some person who calls for the mail, but that does not fill the bill.

This service could be performed by a maimed soldier, on horse-back, or by a boy over 16 years of age, with a bicycle. This man or boy could enter the post-office, under such regulations as the postmaster may make, and then and there separate the mail, and deliver it in the village or town which he serves

You know in many of our large agricultural communities it takes a man sometimes two hours to go to the post-office. You take it in cold weather, when there is a heavy snow on the ground, or in harvest time, and the farmer can ill afford to spare those two hours, or one hour, as the case may be, to go to the post-office for his letters, possibly nine times out of ten returning without anything; and yet his valuable time is lost. Under this system the carrier himself, who shall be appointed by the postmaster to serve the villages and towns in which the post-office is located, can go and take from the office these letters or newspapers and deliver them to the various parties to whom they are addressed. can go and take from the office these letters or newspapers and deliver them to the various parties to whom they are addressed, and receive therefor the rate of compensation agreed upon between the carrier and the people served. Should they like to have a letter mailed, the letter carrier would charge the same price or whatever may be agreed upon. In my judgment, should this system go into operation, our income from the various country post-offices and villages would be increased very largely. I remember the first street lamp boxes that were put up in 1860. It was said when these boxes were put up that it involved a cost that the people would not submit to; that it was a great charge upon the Government. But I know from my own experience in the New Haven post-office, that in less than six months after these letter boxes had been placed upon the street corners, giving the people an opportunity to mail their letters at any hour or at any moment, instead of going 1 mile or 2 miles to the post-office to mail moment, instead of going 1 mile or 2 miles to the post-office to mail the same, it was plainly shown that the receipts doubled, or nearly so, and the letter carriers' department soon commenced paying for itself.

Now, you not only give these people the accommodation they want, whether in villages or rural communities it matters not, but you will increase the receipts of the Post-Office Department but you will increase the receipts of the Post-Office Department by giving people facilities, if you please, to mail and receive their letters. It is like running a horse car. If you run once an hour you will not get nearly the number of passengers that you would get if you run it once in half an hour. If you run it once in half an hour, and you change to once in ten minutes, you would get more than you would in the half hour. People will not wait. Give the people a chance, give the people facilities to receive their letters and to mail their letters, and according to the facilities given the increase will come. It is sure to come. There is no loss incurred at all by the Government. So long as the people want their letters carried in this way, let the farming communities—the villages and the towns of less than 10,000 inhabitants—have that privilege, they paying for it as agreed upon. It is the old penny-post system over again. There is nothing new about it. That penny-post system grew up into free delivery by and by, as you gave the people an opportunity to receive and mail their letters in the way convenient to themselves and without loss of time. Why way convenient to themselves and without loss of time. Why withhold this privilege from the people so long as they are willing to pay for it, where it does not cost the Government one cent?

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have said all that is necessary in explanation of this bill, although I was notified only about ten minutes ago that it was to come up at this time, and I find myself not as fully prepared as I otherwise would have been.

Mr. BRUMM. I should like, Mr. Speaker, to ask the gentleman one question. Does your bill provide that he shall keep a record of the number of letters for the purpose of paying this penny?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRUMM. He shall do it under your bill?
Mr. SPERRY. The bill requires the letter carrier himself to keep a correct record of all letters received for distribution and all collected for the mail and he is to make a report to the postmaster each week of the number received.

Mr. BRUMM. What is to prevent him from adding any num-

Mr. But. What is to prevent militron adding any number beyond the number that he really carries?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is no advantage to him. He does not collect from the Government, but from the fellow whose mail he receives and distributes. The fellow would dispute it.

Mr. SPERRY. A record of these letters shall be kept.

Mr. BRUMM. But one moment. He is not presumed to collect a penny every time he delivers or receives a letter?

Mr. SPERRY. Not at all.

Mr. BRUMM. I judge that he would be paid at so much a week or month. Mr. SPERRY.

He can do either way.

Mr. BRUMM.

I beg pardon.

He can do either way. It is left with him and Mr. SPERRY. those he serves to make the arrangement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They may just pay him $10 a week.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I like the intention of the bill, but under this

Mr. SIMPKINS. I like the intention of the bill, but under this bill do the people who pay for the carriers have any voice in their selection? Is it not left wholly to the postmaster?

Mr. SPERRY. The bill provides that the postmaster himself shall make appointments of the letter carriers, the same as he used to do under the old penny-post system. When that system was in operation and I was postmaster at New Haven I made my own appointments, but those appointments had of course to be approved by the general Post-Office Department. This is a matter between the carriers when appointed and the people they serve, together with the local postmaster in the village or town.

Mr. SIMPKINS. But under this bill the postmaster might appoint as carrier a person who was not suitable or satisfactory, and the people who pay for his services have no remedy.

Mr. SPERRY. Yes, but if he should make such an appointment the carrier would be obliged to give bond for the faithful performance of his duties, so that there is not a particle of possibility of loss to the Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. SPERRY. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Where, in the report of the Postmaster-General, has this measure been recommended, or has it been recommended at all?

Mr. SPERRY. Some years ago, I do not remember exactly how long, it was referred to by the Postmasters-General under veral administrations.

Mr. BINGHAM. The measure to which the gentleman refers was what was called "rural free delivery," was it not?
Mr. SPERRY. "Rural free delivery."
Mr. BINGHAM. That was an entirely different proposition,

Mr. SPERRY. It was substantially this: This proposition has been called to the attention of the people in the farming communities in the granges and other places, and has been generally approved.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, as I understand the gentleman, this line of legislation has only been recommended by the Department in so far as it is similar to what has been known as "rural free delivery," which was simply an experimental service.

Mr. SPERRY. No, sir. I will say to the gentleman that the system which is proposed by this bill is as old as the old lettercarrier system

Mr. BINGHAM. Another question. Is there any regulation of the Department existing to-day which prohibits the postmaster of any office other than a free-delivery office from delivering my mail matter to anyone whom I may depute to receive it?

Mr. SPERRY. There is a rule or regulation which provides that such a postmaster may deliver any person's mail upon the written request of the person to whom the mail matter is addressed, but there is no system about that. It is simply the case of an individual sending a messenger to the post-office for his mail. This bill contemplates a methodical regulation of the business—system by which the people in villages of less than 10,000 population and in farming communities can have an opportunity of having their mail delivered regularly if they so desire.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, as I understand the gentleman's statement, there is nothing in the post-office regulations prohibiting the person to whom the letter is addressed from having it sent to him from the post-office by any messenger whom he may depute to receive it. Further, I say to the gentleman that in the reports of the Postmaster-General there is no other recommendation on this subject beyond the recommendation of an experimental free-delivery service in the rural districts. And now I want to go a step further. The gentleman has stated that this bill in its prostep further. The gentleman has stated that this bill in its provisions will apply to every section of the country where free delivery is not authorized by law; that is, in all towns or villages with a population of less than 10,000 or where the receipts are less than $10,000. Therefore he proposes by this legislation to open up to the operation of this bill every post-office that has not to-day what is called the free-delivery service. Has not the gen-

Mr. SPERRY. I stated—and I thought I made it plain—that this bill proposes a system of delivery in such places. The rule or regulation the gentleman speaks of merely provides that any individual can send a messenger to the post-office to get his mail, but that messenger is not allowed to enter the office for the pur-out that messenger is not allowed to enter the office for the purpose of collecting or distributing the mails.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman mean to say that under this bill every one of this body of men, unlimited in number, covering almost 70,000 post-offices, provided he can get an order from 20 people upon any given route, is to be permitted to go inside the post-office and handle the general mail?

Mr. SPEPRY Voca in provided to go and a second control of the post-office and handle the general mail?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes, sir; precisely as was done under the old free-delivery system.

Mr. BINGHAM. Never mind the old. Tell us about the new system, under the civil service.

Mr. SPERRY. This does not come under the civil-service system.

tem. This bill simply provides that the postmaster shall give these facilities to the people whom he serves if they desire it.

Mr. BINGHAM. And that will apply to every place where the population is less than 10,000 or where the revenues of the office are under $10,000, provided 20 people sign a communication asking for this service?

Mr. SPERRY.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. SPERRY. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. Very well. Under the existing law, in every office where the village or town has a population of over 10,000, or the postal revenue exceeds $10,000, every letter carrier is in the classified civil service, undergoing examination, wearing his uniform, governed by specific rules, his appointment having been approved by the Post-Office Department. Now, wherein does this bill provide that the Postmaster-General shall have any supervision whatever of this proposed great body of carriers, connected with almost 70 000 post-offices? with almost 70,000 post-offices?

Mr. SPERRY. Nowhere; for the very reason that we do not wish to mix up the Government in this matter at all. When the Postmaster-General appoints a postmaster it is expected that he will appoint one who will choose suitable persons for the performance of this carrier service.

Mr. BINGHAM. But he has no discretion with respect to the

You have eliminated the supervision of the Postmaster-General in every post-office where the population is less than 10,000 or the receipts of the office less than $10,000. In such places you give this patronage and this power to the postmaster himself. But the moment you go to an office where the population is 10,000 or the income $10,000 or more, that moment the carrier must go through a rigid civil-service examination, must wear a uniform, and must in all respects be governed by the rules of the service.

Mr. SPERRY. Why, then, do you draw this line? If you are so particular on the one side, why not be just as particular on the

Mr. BINGHAM. In justice to myself and my record here, allow me to say that I brought in the bill which extended this service to communities of 5,000 population. I reported to this House the bill which provided for the experimental rural service, and carried it through the House. Hence I submit to the gentleman that I am through the House. Hence I submit to the gentleman not subject to his criticism.

Mr. SPERRY. Then the gentleman is "almost" but not entirely "such as I am" upon this matter. Is the gentleman willing to extend this service to communities of 5,000 people; and if so, why should we withhold from farming communities that which they themselves are willing and ready to pay for?

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman makes that assumption; but I do not know it to be the fact. I do, however, know this—that they

I do not know it to be the fact. I do, however, know this—that any farming community to-day can designate any person that they desire to receive their mail matter at the respective post-office. If any farming community chooses to take that responsibility it can do so. I say to the gentleman that if we pass this legislation the appointments under it will be unlimited.

Mr. SPERRY. No, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. One main purpose of the system as existing in our great cities to-day is to throw proper safeguards around the carrier force, so as to prevent mail depredations. If the gentleman is going to add to the force of the Government employees in these subordinate lines so as to because a body of carriers and in these subordinate lines, so as to have a body of carriers, each | operation are not employees of the Government of the United of them representing twenty people or more, he is going to more than double the carrier force and open the way to depredations, the prevention or detection of which will require a special-agent force three times as large as that which the Government now has.

Mr. SPERRY. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." This same principle precisely might be invoked to-day in reference to your telegraph service, where you have your little boys carrying most important messages.

Mr. BINGHAM. They do not contain money or other valu-

Mr. SPERRY. There is no difference in principle. Why not apply the same principle to those little fellows who are delivering your telegrams? I can not see the difference.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to answer? Of course, with respect to your telegraphic communications, the company is liable. This bill in section 3 says:

That the letter carriers appointed by authority of this act shall be subject to all the provisions of existing law not inconsistent with this act.

The existing law establishes a bureau for the examination, through its detective or special-agent force, of all violations of law. In this respect the bureau will exercise a supervision, but that is the only feature of the bill which provides for any supervision whatever outside of the local postmaster himself. That special-agent force would have supervision of the vast body of men that this bill proposes to provide for. But does the gentleman suppose that the present special-agency force could do this work? work?

Mr. SPERRY. The gentleman as an old postmaster knows that when he gave a clerk a position in his office he trusted him, and the people trusted him. Under this bill there is provided a penal sum of $100 for every violation of official duty. There is no more danger under this bill than there was when you, as postmaster at Divided bills apprehended a clerk without requiring him to give Philadelphia, appointed a clerk without requiring him to give bonds.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have only this criticism to make upon the

Mr. BINGHAM. I have only this criticism to make upon the gentleman's bill, that it opens up an unlimited increase of force in the postal service—unlimited.

Mr. SPERRY. Not at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Every post-office that fails to turn in a revenue of $10,000 will come under the provisions of this bill. My objection is that the bill practically authorizes an unlimited force. The existing law permits an individual to send whomsoever he chooses to the post-office for his latters the individual taking upon him. to the post-office for his letters, the individual taking upon himself the responsibility. That provision applies everywhere. An important objection to this measure is that there is not a word in it giving to the Postmaster-General or the Post-Office Department it giving to the Postmaster-General or the Post-Office Department any supervision of this business.

Mr. SPERRY. The law of supply and demand operates in this matter. I assume that the gentleman as postmaster would not have increased the number of clerks in his office beyond the demands of the office. Neither would any local postmaster who takes a pride in serving the people add needlessly to the number of carriers connected with his office. The number could not exceed those who could make a living out of such service. The local postmaster would be just as particular as the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be in making his appointments.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman read the provision of his own bill?

That whenever not less than twenty persons who receive their mail matter through the same post-office shall petition the postmaster at such office to appoint one or more letter carriers, who shall be at least 16 years of age, for the delivery of letters and other mail matter therefrom to the persons addressed, at their respective residences or places of business, and for the collection of letters and the conveyance and delivery of them to the post-office, said postmaster shall appoint a suitable number of letter carriers for that purpose

Mr. SPERRY. Precisely. I am glad the gentleman called attention to the language of the bill itself. It provides for the appointment of a suitable number of such carriers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of course; without limit.

Mr. SPERRY. My dear friend, it is precisely the same thing under the regulations by which you conducted your business at Philadelphia. It was unlimited there to the same extent that it is unlimited here

Mr. BINGHAM. It was limited to the extent of the appropriation bill.

Mr. SPERRY. And there is no trouble whatever in reference to this matter. You need not be afraid that the postmaster will appoint so many as to burden or interfere with those whom he has already appointed. It is to be supposed, at least, that a man who is suitable for a postmaster has some practical common sense and judgment to guide him in such matters.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have said what I desired to say, Mr. Speaker.
I have stated my objections, so far as I am concerned, to this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the pending bill and its purposes, the men who are to be employed under its States. They would practically be selected by the people whose mail matter they are going to distribute.

Mr. BINGHAM. To whom would they give bond in case of their appointment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To the Government of the United States, of course Mr. BINGHAM. Then what would determine their character as employees?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was going to say that, being paid by the people whose mail they deliver, as a matter of practical operation it would result in these men being chosen by these people themselves

Mr. BINGHAM. But are they not subject to all of the laws and regulations governing the Post-Office Department—every law?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.
Mr. BINGHAM. Then they give bond to the Government of the United States and are subject to all the laws and regulations of the Postal Department. I ask the gentleman, what are they?
They are designated in this bill as "carriers."
Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the point the gentleman is

They are designated in this bill as "carriers."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the point the gentleman is making. To the extent that these people give bond to the Government of the United States, and are subject to the criminal laws which govern the operations of carriers generally throughout the United States, they are employees of the Government, of course. But as to the question of their selection, practically they will be selected by the people whose mail they deliver, because these people—that is, twenty or more of them uniting together in such request—would agree to the selection of a carrier, and would give their written consent to the postmaster for the appointment.

such request—would agree to the selection of a carrier, and would give their written consent to the postmaster for the appointment, stating that such person so selected is a suitable person to receive and deliver their mail matter. It is always well to go into the practical operation of matters back of the law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the proposed bill—the legislation it seeks to enact—is nothing but the development into law of a system which already exists in a part of this country. For example, down in my own country, in the State of Mississippi, there is a community of people—there are several of them, but I have in mind one community—who annually direct the postmaster to deliver their mail my own country, in the state of mississippi, there is a community of people—there are several of them, but I have in mind one community—who annually direct the postmaster to deliver their mail to a certain person selected by them to receive and deliver it. The carrier gets the mail from the post-office and deposits it in boxes in front of the various plantations on his route, and takes from the boxes such mail matter as has been deposited by the planters, or the renters of the land, and carries it to the post-office. So the common sense of a community in this country has already developed a scheme exactly that which the gentleman from Connecticut desires to put into the shape of law upon our statute books. And in order to avoid the objection of undue expense his bill provides that these carriers shall be paid by the people whose mail they deliver.

Now, it is wrong, inherently wrong, that the great cities of this country should have their free delivery of mail matter, while the people living in more sparsely settled communities can not have such an advantage. But I recognize at the same time the fact that the free delivery of letters in sparsely settled localities would bring about an expenditure to the Government far beyond a due proportion of the number of letters or mail matter delivered, and proportion of the number of letters or mail matter delivered, and all that; and each of us has practically surrendered to the idea that all of the great cities of the United States should have this free delivery, and that the citizen of the United States living in Philadelphia, for instance, should have favors shown him by the Government which a citizen living in the rural districts of Kansas does not have, and which can not be shown to him. I understand that the argument is always made, in answer to that, that the mail of Philadelphia, for example, pays its own way; but that is not true, because for every letter they send out from Philadelphia a letter is received there from some more sparsely settled section of the country. Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not put on that ground. That is one of the grounds of the benefit of free delivery, but in a city where perhaps 200,000 letters are received daily it would take an office five times as large as this Capitol if it depended upon the people calling for their letters. That vast amount of mail matter must be gotten out of that office in some way, just the same as the mail matter which you drop into the office must be removed from the office into the country. Therefore you have the free-delivery office into the country. Therefore you have the free-delivery office into the country. Therefore you have the free darray service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Whatever may be the reason given for the existence of the fact, the fact does exist that a gentleman living in Philadelphia receives his mail free, at the expense of the Government, and a gentleman living at Medicine Lodge, Kans., or some other small place, does not. The fact remains; but men of common sense recognize that that is a necessary discrimination against the man who lives in the sparsely settled country.

If this man who lives in the sparsely settled country is willing to remove the only objection to his being put upon the ground of equality—that objection consisting in the fact that his being put upon the ground of equality would cost the Government a great amount of money—if he proposes to remove that obstacle by paying the money himself, I can not see how anybody under the sun can object. I can see how my scheme of rural free delivery by the Government may be objected to by gentlemen who would have to pay a tax to carry on the scheme, but I can not see how anybody can object to a scheme which involves delivery at the expense of pay a tax to carry on the scheme, but I can not see how anybody can object to a scheme which involves delivery at the expense of the deliveree. Now, as I said a moment ago, this system exists practically in parts of this country. It exists practically in a part of my own county, where, all along the line of a road 40 miles in length, all subject to one post-office, the planters have their boxes out for themselves and their tenants, and they give instructions to the postmaster to deliver their mail to the man who brings it out to them.

Gentlemen may say (If they can do that already they are Gentlemen may say, "If they can do that already, then why the necessity for this law?" The necessity, or rather the advisa-bility, of the law is this, that the people selected by them are not in any manner subject to the supervision of the Government; they give no bond to perform their duties properly, and if anything does happen in the shape of a loss of mail matter, there is nobody who can look into it. The moment a man has given his order to the postmaster to deliver his mail to John Smith, that moment the Post-Office Department has nothing further to do with the letter, after it is delivered to John Smith, and can not even examine into the question as to whether John Smith ever received the letter which he failed to deliver or not. This bill will necessitate the giving of a bond, and will give governmental supervision, without any expense to the Government. It will satisfy a demand existing in the rural districts, which demand is year reasonable in its character in my oninion. very reasonable in its character, in my opinion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment.
Mr. BINGHAM. All right.
Mr. WILLIAMS. One other thing. The gentleman seems to be laboring under the impression that there is something in this bill—and the answer made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Sperry] still further misled him—that there is something enabling these carriers to go behind the railing of the post-office and themselves sort the mail.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is nothing in the bill which allows that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing in the bill which allows that. On the contrary, the bill says the postmaster shall deliver to the men thus selected the letters ordered to be delivered, by the written requests on file in the office. So that that objection does not lie to the bill. I thought I would notice that because I was afraid that the answer given by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Sperry] to the inquiry might have misled others, if it did not mislead the gentleman, into the belief that there was something of that sort worn officers of the Government?

What objection could there be to that, if they are Mr. LOUD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There would be very great objection to that,

Mr. WILLIAMS. There would be very great objection to that, and that objection would be that there would be a divided responsibility. There would be several people with the privilege of sorting the mail, and there would be several people with the privilege of laying upon somebody else the blame for anything wrong that took place during its assortment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement to him with reference to the free-delivery offices, especially with reference to Philadelphia? The gentleman referred to that office, and I should like to answer his objections.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not intend to refer to Philadelphia especially. I made my statement general. The gentleman knows that in all free-delivery offices the rate of postage is 2 cents an ounce. The gentleman also knows that in all other offices, not free-delivery offices, the rate of local postage is 1 cent an ounce. Therefore, where free delivery exists for the delivery of a local letter from one section of a city to another, the same postage is paid as transmits a letter collected in Oregon and delivered in Maine to the party's residence, and as a result of that service in the city of the contract of the collected in the collected i Maine to the party's residence, and as a result of that service in the great cities large revenues of surplus are turned over in the Post-Office Department. I wanted to emphasize the fact that at these offices with which this bill deals the local postage is 1 cent, while where there are letter carriers the rate of local postage is 2 while where there are letter carriers the rate of local postage is 2 cents. I am sorry I brought the city of Philadelphia in, as the entire argument is irrelevant to what we are discussing. The rural districts of this country would be very glad to pay that additional postage to have the same privilege.

Mr. SPERRY. I just want to say one word in reply to my friend from Philadelphia. He spoke of the innumerable number of letter carriers which might come from the offices of the class which the bill proposes to serve. I want to say to the gentleman that I cited there as an example the telegraph boys; but on sitting down I remembered that we have a better example right in the city of Philadelphia and in all other large cities where these little special-delivery boys deliver their mail out of the post-offices, and are appointed by the postmaster himself, and no other person, delivering the most valuable letters, delivering letters which are of the utmost importance to the persons to whom they are addressed, and receiving pay therefor. This is precisely the same; no difference whatever. It gives no more power whatever to the postmaster in one of these communities than is given to the postmasters in the large cities where they have the right to appoint these little special delivery boys, 16 years of age and upward.

Mr. LOUD. But those letters are prepaid, and do not depend upon the generosity of the person to whom they are delivered.

Mr. SPERRY. These letters are also prepaid, or they would not go to the office.

Mr. MOODY. You say that the appointees would not be under the provisions of the civil service. Is there anything in the bill that excludes them?

that excludes them?

Mr. SPERRY. There is not. The bill does not exclude them.

Mr. MOODY. Why would they not be included by virtue of their being letter carriers?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say a few words in reference to the bill under consideration. It is a bill that has been very carefully considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The bill as originally presented did contain some objectionable features, as the committee deemed, and hence considerable time was given to its consideration. As and hence considerable time was given to its consideration. framed and now before us for action it simply seeks to systematize the delivery of mails from a particular post-office to any number of individuals in rural districts, not less than twenty in number, who shall petition the postmaster where they receive their mail for that purpose. There are a number of places in the United States where persons living some distance from the post-office desire to have some particular individual carry their mail from the post-office to their residences, receive their mail, and deliver it at the post-office where they would have to take it or send it by some irresponsible person or by some person to whom they might deliver it

This bill simply seeks, as I said, to accommodate those people and give them some assurance that the mail delivered to the carrier should be promptly delivered and that which they give to him promptly surrendered to the post-office where it should be mailed, and in case of failure to properly deliver that which the individual gives to the carrier or the postmaster gives to the carrier the bill gives to such individual recourse upon the carrier and the securities on his bond. It does not in any manner take from the postmaster in a small country place any emolument which he would otherwise receive, nor does it create any liability whatever upon the Government in any instance which can be imagined.

Mr. BINGHAM. What about violations of the law?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. In what respect?

Mr. BINGHAM. Any violation of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Any violation of the law?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is under the supervision of the post-office inspectors. Do not they make the preliminary investigation if there is any violation of law? This bill simply seeks, as I said, to accommodate those people there is any violation of law?

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. With reference to the letter carrier? Mr. BINGHAM. Why, certainly. Mr. SMITH of Illinois. It creates no responsibility on the part

Mr. SMITH of limitors. It clears to the Government.

Mr. BINGHAM. It does under section 3 of your bill, which, I suppose, covers the administration of the Department.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Certainly, wherever there is a criminal prosecution. But suppose a man is appointed as carrier by the postmaster. The bond under this bill which that carrier gives is a continuous to the postmaster, and he must have securities on the bond. postmaster. The bond under this bill which that carrier gives is given to the postmaster, and he must have securities on the bond. If anyone is aggrieved, they have their recourse on the bond. The bill simply provides that the Government shall not be responsible in any sense whatever. We carefully considered that from every standpoint, and there is no way imaginable where the Government can be responsible in case the carrier failed to do his duty as such carrier. It is divorced entirely from governmental supervision and is only intended to meet the requirements of the rural districts and to accommodate them in these matters. My friend from Pennsylvania smiles. I do not know why. from Pennsylvania smiles. I do not know why.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am smiling only because the gentleman ignores section 3 of his own bill—

Sec. 3. That the letter carriers appointed by authority of this act shall be subject to all the provisions of existing laws not inconsistent with this act.

Therefore these men will come under every law that the letter carriers and the postal clerks and all the postal employees come under. Now, the detection of violations of law in the Department rests largely with the special agents, and therefore when you add these tens of thousands of letter carriers in these nearly seventy thousand post-offices, you must necessarily increase the force of special agents. I say that in answer to the gentleman's statement that this legislation will not impose any expense upon the Gov-

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. But my friend ignores the last words of the section he has just read—"not inconsistent with this act."
This bill proposes to divorce this character of service from govrnmental supervision and to throw the responsibility upon the carrier and his bondsmen, and to give the opportunity of enforcing that responsibility to the person delivering his mail to the carrier or receiving it from him. In the large cities where we have free delivery, and every man can get up in the morning and receive his mail by a carrier selected and employed under the civil service and raid by the Covernment the system is found are received. and paid by the Government, the system is found very convenient, and we merely appeal to this House to say by this bill that the people who live in the rural districts, when not less than twenty of them so desire, may arrange to have their mail matter collected and delivered by a certain provided that they pay that corrien and delivered by a carrier, provided that they pay that carrier themselves, and provided further that the Government shall under no circumstances be responsible in any manner whatever for the faithful performance of the carrier's duties. I certainly hope, Mr. Speaker, that when we come to vote upon this bill members will consider the interests of the rural districts, especially when the interests of the Government are not at stake, and will give the people of the sparsely populated portions of the country the benefit of this carefully guarded law.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in response to the pertinent illustration given by the gentleman from Connecticut just now of "youngsters" being employed to deliver letters under the special-delivery system, I say to him that if he will read the law he will observe that the Postmaster-General must approve the selection of such employees by the postmaster.

To provide for the immediate delivery of letters bearing the special stamp, the postmaster at any office which may come within the provision of this act may, with the approval of the Postmaster-General, employ such person or persons as may be actually required for such service.

The gentleman sees that under the law the approval of the for the special-delivery service; but the gentleman's bill gives the power absolutely to the local postmasters, and so the illustration fails.

Mr. SPERRY. I am well aware of the existence of that law, Mr. SPERRY. I am well aware of the existence of that law, and the matter is put on precisely the same footing in this bill. There is no change. The letter carriers are put upon the same plane, the same level, and they emanate from the same source that the special-delivery boys do.

What time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are about twenty minutes

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to this debate in order to understand, if I could, the objections to this bill. Owing, of course, to my ignorance, I am unable to discover any objection to it except that it is for the benefit of the farmers. I see that some gentlemen who live in cities are opposed to it. I presume that some gentlemen who live in cities are opposed to it. I presume that they have found the free-delivery system a failure in the cities, and that they do not wish to extend the failure to the country. If that be the reason of their objection it is a good one; but if the free-delivery system has been found valuable in the cities, why not let the people in the country have it if they want it? I do not happen to live in the country myself, but I know a good many people who do live there, and if they want this system and are willing to pay for it, why not let them have it?

Mr. BINGHAM. They can have it now.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The gentleman says they can have it now; but if this proposed law will give it to them any quicker, why not let them have it that way? [Laughter.] The nave it now; but it this proposed law will give it to them any quicker, why not let them have it that way? [Laughter.] The gentleman seems to think it is a bad thing, but if a man is going to die by poison, why not let him take a large dose and die quickly? [Laughter.] The only objection that I have heard to the bill is the one stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the people can have this service now under existing laws and regulations. If that is so, why have you not given it to them? The gentleman has been on the Post-Office Committee for a number of years; why has he not given it to them? I have received communications from constituents of mine stating that they did want such legislation as this, and I repeat, why not give it to them? For one I hope that the bill will pass. Whenever a man wants a thing and is perfectly willing to pay for it himself, I do not see why he should not have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to detain the University of the should not have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to detain the House debating this bill. It seems to me that at nearly every session of Congress we have discussion here in regard to alleged discrimination in the postal service against the rural districts. We had it last session with regard to the pay of fourth-class postmasters. Now, here is an opportunity to do something for the rural districts without its costing the Government anything, and it does seem to me that there ought not to be any objection to this bill. I repeat, the Government is put to no expense under this bill. I nederstand that some gentlemen are not willing to support the bill because they say it is only an entering wedge, and that by and by the rural districts will come in and claim that these carriers ought to be paid by the Government. Well, if the system develops into such a suc-cess that Congress can be convinced that it is reasonable and wise for the Government to extend the regular free-delivery service to the population of the rural districts, it will be all right to make the extension, and, on the other hand, if Congress can not be convinced of the wisdom of doing it, the extension will not be made.

vinced of the wisdom of doing it, the extension will not be made.

The objection raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] with reference to prosecutions for violations of the law might be made to every bill that has ever been passed by Congress. It seems to me that there is nothing substantial in that objection. It is charged that there is discrimination made by our postal laws in favor of the people who live in cities.

Here is an opportunity to accommodate the people of the country, and to accommodate them at no expense to the Government. The

Here is an opportunity to accommodate the people of the country, and to accommodate them at no expense to the Government. The proposition is simply that we throw the protecting care of the Government around this character of service. I really do not understand how any gentleman can in good faith oppose giving this advantage to the people in the country districts, who very often have to go for days without their mail and who, when they want to take a letter to the post-office, are sometimes obliged to do it at an expense of two or three dollars, depending upon their distance from the office and the extent to which they may be pressed for time during the busy seasons of the year.

It seems to me that we ought to pass this bill. It seems to me that we ought to pass it unanimously. It seems to me that gentlemen from the cities ought to stand by such a bill as this, especially when it does not east the Government anything. We from tlemen from the cities ought to stand by such a bill as this, especially when it does not cost the Government anything. We from the rural districts are called upon from year to year to vote large appropriations for this special-delivery service. We always do vote for such appropriations to extend this delivery system in the cities. I hope that not only gentlemen representing city districts, but those especially who represent rural communities will vote for this bill. It is one which ought to pass without dissent.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, the time is short; otherwise I would permit this debate to proceed. But, under the circumstances, I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

reading of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I was about to ask for a few moments. There is some time left, I believe.

Mr. SPERRY. If there is time, all right.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman that the time is unlimited. We can consider this bill for the coming week without its losing any right unless some matter of higher privilege should

Mr. SPERRY. Then I hope the gentleman will proceed.
Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I had seriously hoped the time might come when, even on the floor of this House, we could approach the discussion of a question of this sort without at least seeming demands that he we could approach the discussion of a agogy. I had hoped that we could approach the discussion of a question of this character without appealing to the passions or prejudices of the rural element in this country. We have before us a plain business proposition; but after listening to the last two gentlemen who have appealed to us so pitifully in behalf of the rural districts I have said to myself in sorrow, "What is to become of our farming population in the next Congress if we can not have those gentlemen here to represent them?" [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill either amounts to something or it amounts to nothing. If it amounts to anything, it is one of the most dangerous propositions ever presented to Congress. If it amounts to nothing, why should this House spend its time in its discussion or give it any consideration whatever?

Permit me to say, with all due respect to gentlemen with whom I dislike to differ, that this bill confers no privilege or power which does not exist to-day. There is no rural community in this country to-day that can not avail itself of every privilege contemplated by this bill without the passage of any such measure. I had hoped that we could approach the discussion of a templated by this bill without the passage of any such measure. If that is a fact (and if not I call upon any gentleman here to successfully contradict it), then why the necessity for the passage of this bill?

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?
Mr. LOUD. I had hoped the time had come when even the gentleman from South Dakota would allow me to proceed for a few minutes uninterrupted.
Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman need not yield if he does not wish to do so wish to do so.

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will let me finish the "peroration" I now have in view, I will yield to him with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE (to Mr. Loud). Oh, yield to him. Mr. LOUD. All right. I can not resist the appeal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, even if I could that of the gentleman

Mr. PICKLER. I will not trespass upon the gentleman's time.

Mr. LOUD. As I was saying, this bill confers on no community any privilege that it has not to-day. Under existing law any man or set of men can to-day delegate any person they may select to go to the post-office for them and receive their mail.

Mr. BINGHAM. And pay him what they like.

Mr. BINGHAM. And pay him what they like.
Mr. LOUD. And pay him or not, as they choose.
Now, what would be the practical operation of this measure if it should become a law? It could not be successfully operated to the advantage of your farmers up in South Dakota.
Mr. PICKLER. Now will the gentleman allow me to ask him a constion?

question?

Mr. LOUD. I was willing to yield to the gentleman when he stopped me before. I hope he will now allow me to proceed.

Mr. PICKLER. But now the gentleman has alluded to me per-

Mr. PICKLER. But now the gentleman has alluded to me personally.

Mr. LOUD. But the gentleman insists on interrupting me when I am getting up high. [Laughter.] Why not wait until I stop? Mr. PICKLER. But you are always "getting up high." [Laughter.] I want to ask the gentleman by what process we can put these carriers under bonds without some statute authorizing it?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, it is not necessary to put them under bonds at all. I believe there are hundreds of good, respectable, honest citizens in every community who can be trusted to deliver the mail to persons in their vicinity. There has never yet been any serious complaint in that direction.

now, let us be practical. This measure could not be successfully operated except in thickly settled communities. Go into a farming district where families are located from 1 to 5 miles apart. No man in the world could successfully deliver letters in such a community at 1 cent a letter. Now, let us be practical. This will could possibly be successful only in the thickly settled portions. bill could possibly be successful only in the thickly settled portions of the country, even if enacted into law. But let us put it in successful operation for a moment and see what the results would be. Let twenty people in one locality petition for the appointment of a carrier by the postmaster to deliver their mail. Is their mail of sufficient magnitude in such localities to support the expenses of sufficient magnitude in such localities to support the expenses of this carrier? No. He can not expect to receive very much compensation for the service. He can perhaps get 1,000 persons on his list who will agree to pay 1 cent on every letter delivered. How many—and I will ask each gentleman present to consult his own conscience and his knowledge of the conduct of men—how many men will pay a debt varying from 1 to 3 cents? I claim that the collection of this amount of money is impracticable. One-half or two-thirds of it, no doubt, could be collected. But the collection of the whole of it would be almost impossible. What is the inevitable result? No man has ever yet performed a service for the Government of the United States as an officer or employee and Government of the United States as an officer or employee and failed to receive pay but has come to Congress at some future time and has demanded the compensation to which he claimed to be entitled. If this bill were put into operation and these men did not receive pay for the carrying of the mail you would find them knocking at the doors of Congress to be compensated as sworn officers of the Government, and in time they would be powerful enough, just as the letter carriers of the country have been powerful enough in the past to force the payment to them for overtime, which in that case amounted to about $4,000,000.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, you will be here to prevent that.

[Laughter.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I shall not be here, I am sorry to say, forever, A MEMBER. Well, you will be here the next time, and Friend PICKLER will not. [Laughter.]
Mr. LOUD. I am sorry even to lose the gentleman from South Dakota, who gives me so much trouble.

Mr. Speaker, this bill comes before Congress without the recommendation of the Post-Office Department. It comes without, so far as I have been able to ascertain as the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the demand or the request of any body of citizens in the land. I would like to have had incorporated in the report accompanying the bill the letter of the Postmaster-General sent to the committee in regard to it. has not been embodied in the report.

Mr. SPERRY. Because it was received after the report was prepared. Mr. LOUD. But I will say that it does not commend this measure to the careful consideration of this body. I regard it as a measure probably of great danger to the country on the one hand, and on the other as straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. I hope—I sincerely hope, sir—that this House will consider on the one side the gravity of the situation that may confront it, and the absurdity of the situation, on the other hand, of assuming to throw something to the rural districts of the country that will amount to nothing.

Mr. PICKLER. Is not that the unanimous report of the committee?

mittee?

Mr. SPERRY. It was the unanimous report of the committee; and nothing surprises me more than to hear the gentleman from California taking the position that he does. Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say that I opposed this bill in the committee.

Mr. SPERRY. If you did I did not know it.
Mr. LOUD. Very well; there are other members of the committee who do know it.

Mr. SPERRY. I want the House to understand the logic, if it possibly can, of the gentleman from California. He is making a speech against the bill. He charges that there is nothing in the bill; then that it is the most dangerous bill that was ever passed; and yet he says in the same breath and at the same time that the very same thing is already embodied in the law.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is that conceded?

Mr. SPERRY. I do not know whether it is or not. I simply say that it is putting it into the form of law, and describing the way and manner in which people who wish to receive their mail shall proceed in order to secure its delivery in such manner as shall be most convenient to them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish this bill to be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken upon the passage of the bill, on demand of Mr. Loud the House divided; and there were—ayes 101,

So the bill was passed. On motion of Mr. SPERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. If the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have no further business, the Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.
Mr. LACEY, Mr. Speaker—

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with Mr. DINGLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

report the first bill.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 9473) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker.—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will yield to my colleague [Mr. Grow] after a minute. I wish briefly to explain the purpose of the bill. It is the usual pension appropriation bill, and reduces the expenditures below what they were in the last bill some $75,000.

The committee examined the Commissioner of Pensions at length, and under his testimony they were unable to make any reduction in the first paragraph of the bill, which appropriates $140,000,000 for the payment of pensions during the coming fiscal

The Commissioner of Pensions stated that there were a large number of pending applications made under the general law which would have to be adjudicated during this time. Many of them, he stated, would be allowed, and large amounts paid, and while it was true that the death rate in the pension roll was increasing, yet that it would be more than offset by the increase in payments in adjudicated cases, under what is known as the general law, that is, under the acts of Congress passed prior to the act of 1890. The amount paid during the last fiscal year was between $138,000,000 and $139,000,000. The amount that will be paid during the next fiscal year will probably exceed $139,000,000. So that, taking into consideration the total increase in the bill by the allowance of cases under the general law, the committee did not feel at liberty to reduce this item, and they allowed the total estimate of the Commissioner of Pensions. The Commissioner of Pensions stated that there were a large missioner of Pensions.

In the item of fees of examining surgeons the committee, after due consideration, reduced the amount estimated $50,000, making a recommendation of $700,000 instead of $750,000, the amount estimated by the Commissioner.

The salaries of agents are fixed by law, and they amount to $72,000. No reduction could be made in this item.

The next item is clerk hire at agencies. The law passed in the last session, which directed pension agents to pay by checks instead of currency at the agencies, has enabled the Commissioner of Pensions to make some reductions in the clerical force at the different agencies. He has done that, and contemplates further reductions. He, however, said that he could not safely manage the Department with less than $430,000, and as the making of reductions is partly experimental at present, the committee did not feel justified in making any further reduction below the amount which the Commissioner said he would try to get along with. We therefore reduced that item $20,000, and have recommended $430,000.

The other two items, fuel and light, are not changed from the estimate, but the estimate for stationery and necessary expenses, meaning contingent expenses, is increased from $30,000 to $35,000, The committee took considerable testimony upon that subject, and finally consented to an increase of $5,000. The Commissioner stated that under the present law, as applied and applicable to the civil-service law, it was impossible to readily get help in case of a busy day or two at a pension agency when there was a great a busy day or two at a pension agency when there was a great desire to make prompt payments to pensioners. He stated that he had no power whatever to employ any extra help, even for a day; that he could not do it; that if he made a requisition upon the civil-service branch of the Government, before he would get the clerks to the place where they were needed the occasion for their employment would expire. We therefore gave him an additional $5,000 to use in his discretion for the employment of help for a day or two or three days. It seems that in the last fiscal year there was a detailed force. The Commissioner was empowered to employ laborars for a day or two or three days at time. But Complex laborars for a day or two or three days at time. But Comwas a detailed force. The Commissioner was empowered to employ laborers for a day or two or three days at a time. But Commissioner Lochren revoked this order; and then, the order of the President with reference to the classified civil service having gone into effect, including all laborers in this Department under the civil-service law, it became an absolute impossibility for the Commissioner to employ men even for two or three hours. Therefore, after considering the matter fully, the committee thought that the request was a reasonable one, and we allowed the additional $5,000, to be used at the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions. If not used it will be turned into the Treasury again. The committee increased the amount for rent $300. The testimony of the Commissioner was that at one agency, at Topeka, it was necessary to have that increase in order to accommodate the office there.

The total reduction amounts, in round numbers, to about $75,000 from the amount appropriated for the last fiscal year. I may say that the report of the subcommittee was unanimous and the report of the general committee was unanimous.

With this brief explanation, I will now yield the floor to others who may have anything to say on the subject.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Yes, sir.
Mr. PICKLER. There is no new provision in the bill?
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is the same as before. There is no new legislation in the bill, and no attempt at legislation in the bill-no attempt at any alteration. It is simply the appropriation as before.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman explain to my ignorance what the navy pension fund is? What is the income of that fund? Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand, it is about Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As I understand, it is about $400,000 a year. The law passed during the war in reference to prizes appropriated a certain percentage of captures to the navy pension fund. Nearly all of this fund is used to pay pensions accruing to persons disabled in the Navy, and the Government appropriates the balance to make up the roll. That is all there is of that. There is, I think, a small part of it that is used for a purpose entirely consistent, but so minute that it does not amount to anything. Nearly all the navy pension fund is applied to navy pensions, and then we appropriate the balance.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. How much time does the gentleman need?

Pennsylvania. How much time does the gentleman need?
Mr. GROW. Not a great deal. I do not intend to be long.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I yield the gentleman whatever time he wants.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday, at the conclusion of the reading of the President's message, I was anxious then to call the attention of the House for a few minutes to one or two

I will now ask the Clerk to read the extracts from the message of the President which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The order test as 2010 war.

The only entire fiscal year during which this law has been in force ended on the 30th day of June, 1896. In that year our imports increased over those of the previous year more than $6,500,000, while the value of the domestic products we exported, and which found markets abroad, was nearly $70,000,000 more than during the preceding year.

Whatever may be its shortcomings as a complete measure of tariff reform, it must be conceded that it has opened the way to a freer and greater exchange of commodities between us and other countries, and thus furnished a wider market for our products and manufactures.

Thus, it seems, Mr. Chairman, that the expenditures of the Government for the last fiscal year, closing June 30, 1896, were in round numbers $25,000,000 more than the receipts. The year preceding the deficit was $45,000,000 in round numbers. By the monthly statement sent us by the Secretary of the Treasury the expenditures of the Government since the 1st day of July, 1896, to the 1st day of December, the present month, have been $40,976,453 more than its receipts. These three items of deficiency in revenue run through two years and five months, yet the President makes no recommendation as to any mode of increasing the revenues of the Government, but simply assures us that no deficit that has occurred or may occur need excite or disturb us. A very placid mood for the Executive of the Republic while its annual expenses have exceeded its receipts about an average of $50,000,000 a year during his present term of office.

The President seems to rest secure that the creditors of the nation will be paid unless the engravers and the money-printing presses of the Government shall break down. He compares the existing tariff with itself one year with another, and declares it has done better this year than it did the year before, and if it is let alone long enough it will undoubtedly some time meet all the expenses of the Government. In addition, he declares that it has opened the way to a freer and greater exchange of commodities between us and other countries.

I do not propose to discuss the tariff to-day in any partisan spirit, or to excite any questions relating to free trade or protection, but simply to call attention to the business character of the existing simply to call attention to the business character of the existing tariff. It is not a question of whether this tariff is better for one year than another, but whether it is a good tariff for any year. If it is, we need no change. If it is not good for any year, then our first duty, as part of the legislative department of the Government, is to so change it as to provide revenue enough to meet the expenses of the Government economically administered. In a number of the schedules in the existing tariff less duty is collected on a larger valuation of imports than in the McKinley tariff for a corresponding year, and articles of pure luxury of a larger amount are imported under the present tariff and less duty collected.

To compare some of the schedules in the two tariffs as to amount of importation and duties collected, take earthen, stone, and china ware. Without taking the time to state the amount of importation in each year, I will give the difference in the valuation each year and the difference in the duties collected. The valuation on china ware, earthen ware, etc., imported in 1896 was $1,162,193 greater than in 1893, and the duty collected on these very same kinds of articles $1,841,499 less than was collected under the tariff in 1893. In fruits and nuts the importation in 1896 was $5,721,055 in 1893. In fruits and nuts the importation in 1896 was $5,721,055 more than in 1893, and the duty collected was $1,211,173 less than was collected in 1893.

Take iron and steel. This is the only item that I shall read the importation of which in 1896 was less in valuation than that of 1893, but while the importation of 1896 was $8,264,000 less than that of 1893, the duty collected was, in round numbers, $12,000,000 less in 1896 than in 1893. All the other cases to which I call attended. less in 1896 than in 1893. All the other cases to which I call attention are cases where the importation of foreign products in 1896 exceeded in amounts and valuation the importation in 1893, and in every instance less duty was collected in 1896 from the same kinds of articles on a larger importation. That is, under the existing tariff a larger amount of importation is made than was made under the McKinley tariff and less duty on that larger amount was collected; that, too, at a time when the Government needs the revenue.

The friends of the existing tariff are claiming that it is better than the tariff that it superseded. It is time for some gentleman on the Democratic side of the House to rise and in eloquent terms denounce "McKinleyism" as we have heard it so often for the last three years. While the revenues on these articles fell off, the importations increased. Take wool and manufactures of wool. I grant that there was a theory underlying the change made in the tariff on the woolen schedule. In the other cases there was no theory, nothing but a want of business capacity. [Laughter and applause.] But in the case of wool there was both a false theory and a want of business capacity. theory and a want of business capacity.

The imports of wool and woolen manufactures in 1896 show a valuation of $27,000,000, in round numbers, more than the imports of the same articles in 1893, while the duty collected upon this great increase of imports is $21,477,354 less than in 1893. That is, we have brought foreigners in competition with our own great wool industry, woolgrowing and the manufacture of wool, thus giving employment to the labor of other countries, while our own labor goes begging in the streets, and in doing it have thrown away $22,000,000 of revenue. Take carpets and carpeting. I read this to further illustrate the want of business capacity shown in the existing tariff in levying duties on what are called It is evident that a large amount of revenue from Iuxuries. It is evident that a large amount of revenue from foreign importations can not be collected without making it somewhat burdensome, unless duties are made very large on what are called the luxuries of life. Here are carpets and carpeting, including the highest priced carpets, Axminsters, Moquettes, and carpets woven on special orders to fit a particular room. In 1895 the importations of these goods were $7,146 more in valuation than the importations in 1892, while the duty collected on them was $217,646 less than the duty collected on the importations of 1892.

Now, take the tin-plate industry. Before 1890 there was not a pound of tin plate made for market in this country. The manufacture for consumption commenced at that time. The importation in 1895, under the present tariff, the first year of this tariff, was 534,000,000 pounds, as against 403,000,000 pounds in 1892. That is, there was 131,784,122 pounds of tin plate imported in 1895 more than was imported in 1892; yet the duty collected upon that importation of 130,000,000 pounds more in 1895 was $1,464,610 less than the duty collected in 1892. This loss of revenue is a clear discrimination against our own industry. We can produce all the tin plate this country needs. The existing manufactories have sufficient capacity, but they have been partially shut down for two years. We close the door to the product of foreign factories and call it "increasing our trade with foreign nations."

Take brandy—if it had been whisky there might have been some Take brandy—if it had been whisky there might have been some reason in that. [Laughter.] We imported 8,349 gallons more last year than we imported in 1892, and collected $232,992 less revenue. Take distilled spirits. Our imports last year were $191,951 greater in valuation than our imports in 1893, yet we collected $558,848 less revenue.

These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the illustrations of the kind of tariff that we are asked to continue until it shall meet the deficiencies in the revenue. I grant that it gained about $12,000,000 upon itself in its second year, but at that rate how long would it take to make up the deficit in revenue already incurred?

The duty collected on the nine articles that I have enumerated—the same class of articles in each tariff, remember-the duty collected upon those articles during the fiscal year which closed on the 30th of June last, was $39,114,676 less than the duty collected under the McKinley tariff on a much less amount of importa-

Sugar was on the free list under the McKinley law, and 1890

Sugar was on the free list under the McKinley law, and 1890 was the last year that it was dutiable until this tariff.

Let me compare the operations of the existing tariff with the tariff preceding the McKinley tariff.

In 1890 the Treasury of the United States collected on the importation of sugar into this country $53,985,873, that being the last year in which sugar was on the dutiable list.

In the year of this tariff which the President refers to in his message with commendation—the year closing on the 30th of last June—there was collected on sugar $29,808,140, being $24,000,000 less than was collected in 1890.

For years we have had a wide difference of views between political parties in this country, and probably we shall continue to have such differences for years to come as to protection and free trade.

Protection means employment for American labor in producing in this country such articles as climate, soil, and natural facilities would allow of being produced here to advantage, at a rate of wages—the highest possible—and permit the articles produced to be sold in market. Free trade means the payment to labor everywhere of the lowest wages paid to labor anywhere. Everybody can choose between these theories. I do not propose to enter into any discussion of them at this time. But as a business proposition we are to consider the results of these two tariffs as they affect the Treasury of the United States. The question of how to collect revenue for the expenses of this Government is a business

These two tariffs have been tested in practical operation. Such practical tests are better than any theory, better than all logic, better than all disputations where imagination furnishes the "facts" instead of taking into consideration the results of practical operations in business.

I have here a table showing the total exports and imports of this country during four years, also the dutiable and free, and showing the amount of duties collected. This table shows the results in the years 1892, 1893, 1895, and 1896, two years under the McKinley tariff and two years under the existing tariff. The year 1894 is a year which in fairness can not be used by way of comparison with anything before or after. That was a year in which the country was engaged in remodeling the tariff. A great part of that fiscal year Congress was engaged in both Houses on that measure.

The party that framed the present tariff came into power on the 4th of March, 1893, having been elected in 1892. As soon as that election was over, the influence of the anticipated change in the election was over, the influence of the anticipated change in the tariff policy of this Government swept over not only our own country, but the nations of the world with whom we dealt. Hence country, but the nations of the world with whom we have 1894 is a year which no one who wishes to deal fairly can use by way of comparison with anything before or since. But we may fairly refer to 1892 and 1893 (the two years immediately preceding 1894), and 1895 and 1896 (the two years immediately succeeding), for any purpose of comparison.

In the years 1892 and 1893 the total exports of this country amounted to $1,877,943,341. In the years 1895 and 1896 the total exports amounted to $1,690,145,103, being $187,798,238 less than for the two years 1892 and 1893.

Yet the President assures us that this tariff has opened the way to a freer and more expanded commerce with foreign nations. This is his claim, in spite of the fact that under this new policy the exports for 1895 and 1896 are nearly $200,000,000 less than they were in 1892 and 1893, really the last two years, for comparison, of the McKinley tariff.

The total dutiable imports for 1895 and 1896 are substantially the same in amount as the dutiable imports were for 1892 and 1893. There is a nominal difference of $10,740,709. But the advalorem duties in forcethe two years of this tariff—greater in number than heretofore—would more than make up the difference in valuation. So that the total dutiable imports of 1895 and 1896 are substantially the same as were the dutiable imports of 1892 and 1893. Yet the duties collected in 1895 and 1896 under this tariff that we are asked to allow to remain until it shall make up all deficiencies amounted to $68.353.224 less than the collections on deficiencies amounted to $68,353,224 less than the collections on the same amount of dutiable imports in 1892 and 1893. It is seriously proposed as a matter of business that we allow these importations of foreign merchandise to come in competition with American labor, and in addition fail to collect as much revenue upon them as was collected in the two corresponding years prior to the enactment of this tariff.

The following table shows the total exports and imports, and the duties collected for the years 1895 and 1896 compared with the years 1892 and 1893:

Year.	Total exports.	Total imports.	Free.	Dutiable.	Duties collected.

It is for the Congress of the United States to restore the revenues of the Government so as to equal its expenditures or to reduce those expenditures to correspond with the revenue. Who on this side of the House or who on the other side believes that we can reduce materially the expenditures of this Government? we can reduce materially the expenditures of this Government? They are now no greater than they were when the gentlemen on the other side were in power. We do not charge that they were extravagant in expenditures. This mighty country, with its great rivers, its mighty arteries of trade and commerce, requires a great expenditure, and it can hardly be expected to be less from year to year. Wise statesmanship, then, requires that we provide in legislation that the revenues shall equal the necessary expenses of the Government, and its people are ready at all times to meet any such demand upon their resources instead of borrowing money for current expenses in time of peace for future generations to pay. But, Mr. Chairman, it is the old system. It is familiar to us all. History repeats itself. Every year of Buchanan's Administration the expenditures of the Government exceeded its revenues. Each year for the past three years we have had the same nues. Each year for the past three years we have had the same idea illustrated in the present Administration. The Bourbon of any times learns nothing and forgets nothing. [Laughter.]

In the old days, it is true, free trade harmonized with the labor system which existed in nearly one-half of the country. At that time and under those conditions there was some little reason in their free-trade theory. Capital owned its labor, and it must furnish clothing, provisions, houses, and everything for its sub-stance, and it had no interest in the elevation or the advancement stance, and it had no interest in the elevation or the advancement of labor. At that time and under those conditions free trade had something upon which to rest. The owner of labor would buy the cheapest products of the Old World—products of the poverty-stricken labor of the old nations of the world, because capital thought it could get it at less price than it could purchase the same articles at home. They must furnish their labor, and they would do it at the lowest possible cost. But what was a seeming reason for that system at that time has passed forever away. From the Gulf to the Lakes and from ocean to ocean, with a people homogeneous in ideas and institutions, and everywhere with the same great stake and interest in the advancement and well-being of labor, which does so much to add to the greatness and glory of a republic, the reason which existed for the old idea exists no a republic, the reason which existed for the old idea exists no more, yet the gentlemen who still cling to it, the same old idea, now call it "statesmanship." [Laughter.]

There is no longer any reason for the retention of the system which once existed, with the state of society, industries, and population that now exists, so different from the condition which formerly prevailed. Yet we still find supporters of the old theory and advocates of the same old principles.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that I know of no higher duty to-day for the lawmakers of this country than to provide a system for revenue that will meet all the expenses of the Government and provide for finally extinguishing the national debt. The McKinley bill was framed to reduce revenue. That was its title. There was no sham about it. It was made to reduce revenue. That was its title. There was no sham about it. It was made to reduce revenue. We had been paying throughout the entire term of Mr. Harrison's Administration $64,000,000 a year in extinguishment of the national debt. That was done under a revenue protective tariff policy begun under the leadership of the venerable Senator from Vermont, Mr. MORRILL, to whom belongs the credit of combining ad valorem and specific duties together in custom-

Under the system of revenue protection formulated at that time, and established and maintained by the Republican party for thirty years, two-thirds of the national debt of almost three thousand milyears, two-thirds of the national debt of almost three thousand million dollars was paid before this Administration came into power. They have added $262,000,000 to the interest-paying debt of the nation, with a deficiency in revenues of $140,000,000 during the time they have been in power. How long can this system of revenue continue before this tariff—as the President assures us—will meet all the deficiencies in revenue? While the McKinley bill accomplished what it was intended to accomplish—a reduction of revenue. nue—the prostrating of the business of the country by the change in Administration in 1892 caused too great a reduction. But had the times continued under the same political power, with the same policy prevailing in the Government, the McKinley tariff would have continued to raise enough revenue to pay the expenses of the Government and continue to discharge portions of the national debt annually, as required by the pledge of the Government in 1862, when the first issue of paper money was made.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who compose the legislative department of the Government now and those who will come immediately after them will have no higher duty to perform than that of providing by law for raising sufficient revenue for all the expenditures of the Government by a system of revenue protection.

While we were all content and satisfied with what is known as the McKinley tariff, yet I think like good sportsmen we will all be ready and willing to bet our money on the tariff that will be framed and known hereafter as the "Dingley tariff bill." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs for amendment and debate under the rule.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as fol-

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons for services rendered within the fiscal year 1898, $700,000. And each member of each examining board shall, as now authorized by law, receive the sum of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or a less number shall be examined on any one day, and $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on such day: Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day, no fewer them twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and that if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made: Provided further, That no fee shall be paid to any member of an examining board unless personally present and assisting in the examination of applicant: Provided, That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment at the end of line 28.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding after the words "entitled to," in line 23, the following: "Which rating shall be conclusive as to the amount of pension, if any, to be allowed in each case."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Chairman, the bill requires that these examining surgeons shall not only write out their diagnosis of the case, but that they shall also specifically stipulate the amount which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to. Now, that has been the practice for a long time, and yet the supervising board in the Pension Office has never paid any attention, so far as anybody could discover, to the rating made by the local examining board. By putting in that amendment, the supervisory board in the Pension Office will be left to determine, from the diagnosis as written out and reported by the local board, the question whether any pension shall be allowed—whether the diagnosis shows that the applicant is entitled to a pension. If they determine that he is entitled to a pension, then the rating fixed by the local board is the rating that will govern. Some gentlemen might think that this would leave to the local examining board the entire question as to whether or not a pension should be granted.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. CONNOLLY. Certainly.
Mr. LACEY. Suppose a pensioner, in the judgment of the Department, was entitled to $18 a month, and suppose the local board should give him only $6. This amendment which you offer would should give him only $6. This amendment which you offer would prevent the pensioner from receiving the $12 a month which he would otherwise be entitled to, making a total of $18.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No, that would not be true, because the matter is still left entirely in the hands of the supervisory board in the Pension Office. They are not compelled, as they are not now compelled, to take the report of any local board of examining surgeons; and it is within the knowledge, probably, of every gentleman in this House who has had occasion to investigate these pension cases that the examining board in the Pension Office repeatedly send the applicant to different boards, for different examinations, in cases where the local boards have already reported such a diagnosis as entitles the applicant to a pension. The supervisory board in the Pension Office, not content with that, send him to another board. That board reports a diagnosis entitling him to a pension. They are not content with that. They send him to still another and another board, to find some board that will finally make a diagnosis showing him not entitled to a pension. They will reserve the same power with this amendment pension. They will reserve the same power with this amendment put in that they do now. This does not interfere in any way with the administration of the Pension Office other than that while pension. the supervisory board of the Pension Office finally determine that a man is entitled to a pension, then, when they come to that conclusion, they will be compelled to accept the rating which the law requires the local board to make.

requires the local board to make.

Now, why should the local board be required by the law as it stands to make any rating at all if that rating is to be of no force or effect? The supervisory board in the Pension Office assumes to make the rating from the diagnosis written out by the local board; so that, after all, if the supervisory board in the Pension Office does what it ought to do, and if the local boards of examiners do what they ought to do, then the rate of pension will be fixed by the report made by the local board. But gentlemen all know that the English language is not capable of such refinement as will enable the local board to write out a diagnosis as perfect and complete as the diagnosis made by the men who see and hear and feel and touch the applicant for the pension. The local board are then prepared, when through with the examination of the applicant, from their sense of sight, their sense of touch, their sense of hearing, as well as the manipulation of the applicant himself—they are best prepared to say to what extent that man is disabled. They can write out in medical or surgical phrase how they find him disabled, as to his nervous system, his eyesight, his hearing, his heart, liver, lungs, and all that, but they can not put down on paper so that anybody else can see it the general appearance of debility and decrepitude of that applicant who was before them. They can see and feel and hear that, but they can not write it down. Who, then, is best able to determine the extent of his disability? They are. But it still leaves the question to the examining board in the Pension Office to say whether a pension shall be allowed or not. That I do not think it would be wise to interfere with; but when all the members of the supervising board agree that the applicant is entitled to a pension, then let the men who manipulate the applicant, who see him and hear him and touch him, say on their judgment and their official oaths what the pension ought to be, and if the supervisory board is not content with their rating send him to another board and still another board and get the judgment of all those boards.

Mr. ERDMAN. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. ERDMAN. I raise the point of order that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to say anything on the point of order? The gentleman from Pennsylvania made the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It is suggested to me that the point of order was not made in time.

was not made in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that he made it at the time the amendment was presented.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I certainly did not hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [referring to Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It was another gentleman from Pennsylvania. There are more than one gentleman from Pennsylvania. Ivania. There are just thirty gentlemen from Pennsylvania on this floor sylvania. There are just thirty gentlemen from Pennsylvania on this floor.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I beg the gentleman's pardon,
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CONNOLLY, Well, yes; I have this to say on the point of order: The amendment does not change existing law. There is no law now authorizing any supervising board that I know of, or giving that board sole power to fix the rate of pension where a pension is allowed. Their duties are prescribed, and among their prescribed duties no such duty can be found as that authorizing them to fix the rate of pension. The law does require the local board to fix the rate of pension, and this is simply saying by law what we mean as to what the specific rate of pension shall be. I say that it does not make any change of fixed law as existing to-day. It is simply a change in the practice of the Pension Office—that and nothing more.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will allow me, is it not a fact that until recently the pension examining surgeons were only permitted to make a diagnosis of the case and make no rating whatever; and that recently they have reestablished the rating by the board of surgeons, and that the advisory surgeons in the Pension Office merely act under a rule of the Commissioner and not by law at all?

Mr. CONNOLLY, I understand that formerly these appropriates.

law at all?

Office merely act under a rule of the Commissioner and not by law at all?

Mr. CONNOLLY. I understand that formerly these appropriation bills passed—I do not know how many years ago—without any provision of this kind at all—that is, a proviso that the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to. I understand these pension appropriation bills were formerly passed without any provision of that kind in at all, regulating the duties of the local examining surgeons in this respect. For some years past, I am informed, it has been the custom to put a provision in the bill requiring them to make that kind of a rating in their report. I understand that under the rule invoked by the gentleman no change of law can be made in an appropriation bill.

Now, I make answer to the gentleman, there is no law giving authority to the supervisory board of medical examiners to fix or make the rating. The law has existed for some years requiring the local board of examining surgeons to fix the rating. This amendment does not change that. The bill as reported from the committee requires the same thing—that the local board shall fix the rating. Now, I believe that has been required for years. What was the original purpose, manifestly, of requiring the local board to fix the rating if it was not that they should have some governing and controlling power? And this simply says what that governing and controlling power shall be, from the reports made by them, the local board, namely, that if the Pension Office finds the applicant entitled to a pension, then that the rating found by the local board shall be the rating accepted by the Pension Office.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not desire to say anything on the point of order, but do desire to make some remarks upon the

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I do not desire to say anything on the point of order, but do desire to make some remarks upon the amendment if the point of order is not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If the bill has been read I desire to offer the following amendment. I understand only the first section has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to the first section?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It applies to the second section.
The CHAIRMAN. Which paragraph?
Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It applies to the second paragraph.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 3, strike out the words "as nearly as practicable."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I reserve the point of order on that amendment

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I offer that amendment for the following reasons: As the law reads now, and as it has read for years with these words in it, the Commissioner of Pensions has been enabled to pay in the city of New York, where they have only 52,000 pensioners on the roll, $36,000 for clerk hire, while in the State of Iowa and at the city of Des Moines, where they have 56,000 pensioners on the roll, they only expend $24,000 in the payment of clerk hire. In the city of Topeka, where they have 105,000 on the rolls, we only expend $1,000 more in clerk hire than they do in New York, where they have only one-half that number of pensioners on the roll.

Now, I submit that it does not and that it should not take a dollar more to pay the pensioners in New York in proportion to Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I offer that amendment for the foldollar more to pay the pensioners in New York in proportion to their number than it takes to pay the pensioners in Iowa or in Kansas; and certainly there can be no reason why it should cost as much money to pay 52,000 pensioners in New York as it costs to pay 105,000 at the agency in Topeka, Kans. If the words that I have moved to strike out are left in this bill, the Commissioner can continue to pay out as much money at the agency in New York as he pays out in Iowa or in Kansas, although the number of pensioners there is so much less. More than that, the way this bill is worded they can employ and they do employ in the city of New York to pay their pensioners ten more clerks than are employed at the agency in Iowa, yet they have not so many pensioners on the rolls. They have seven more clerks at the New York agency than we have at the Kansas agency, although we have double the number of pensioners.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Those extra clerks have been discharged.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I beg the gentleman's pardon, they have not been discharged. They do claim that in New York they will discharge eight men, but the men have not yet been discharged. will discharge eight men, but the men have not yet been discharged. Besides, instead of discharging only eight they ought to do the work with about half the number they now employ. Another thing. At the present time there ought not to be any more money required to pay pensioners in proportion to their numbers at one agency than at another. Why? Because they are all paid by mail. Now, I submit that by striking out the words to which I have called attention, the House can require the Commissioner of Pensions to use just the amount of money that is necessary at each agency, instead of allowing him to expend twice as much in New York in proportion to the amount of work to be done. I trust, therefore, that the amendment will be sustained. So far as the point of order is concerned, I say that no point can be raised against this amendment, because it does not point can be raised against this amendment, because it does not change existing law, nor does it increase appropriations. On the contrary, it decreases appropriations.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is perhaps laboring under some want of information as to the exact Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is perhaps laboring under some want of information as to the exact facts in regard to these pension agencies. It is true that the agency in New York pays more for clerk hire than is paid at the Topeka agency. It is true, also, that the pensions paid at the Topeka agency are double in number those that are paid in New York. The cause of the disparity in the number of clerks is found in the system of paying pensions which existed before the last amendment of the law. Prior to that amendment the pensioners were paid in money. They went to the agencies and got their pay in cash, but at the last session we passed an amendment requiring the pensioners appeared in person at the New York agency and got their money, while a large proportion of those who were paid at the Topeka agency, and who lived in Missouri and Colorado and other adjacent States, were even then paid by check. It is obvious that under the amended law a much less force will be required than was necessary when payment was made in currency.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the gentleman know it to be a fact that where pensioners are paid in money the extra force is used only two or three days before and after pay day?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not necessarily so short a time.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Say weeks, then.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The force has to be there, If the time intervening between payments was all taken up in paying the time intervening between payments was all taken up in paying the time intervening between payments was all taken up in paying the time intervening between payments was all taken up in paying the time to the chair at that time. I find that the rulings of different Chairmen vary from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair lab that the clear at that time. I find that the rulings of different Chairmen vary from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair substance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair substance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair substance.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair at pensioners there would be a tremendous objection to the system, but that is not the case. Under the old way of making payment the force had to be sufficient to pay the pensioners on pay day or within a day or two of that, but when the new law went into effect requiring payment to be made by check it became possible to discharge a good many men from the New York agency, and the Commissioner states that he intends to discharge an additional nummissioner states that he intends to discharge an additional number there, as well as at other agencies.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I hope the gentleman does not mean to imply that I have been trying to mislead the House.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not at all.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Because I have in my hand a letter dated December 5, 1896, in which the number of clerks at the New York agency is given as I have stated it here, and it was stated on behalf of the Pension Office that they contemplated discharging only eight men from the New York agency.

behalf of the Pension Office that they contemplated discharging only eight men from the New York agency.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Well, I do not suppose that the men have yet ceased their connection with the office, but the Commissioner stated before the committee, I think, that he had ordered the discharge of ten men at the New York agency. We have reduced the appropriation for clerk hire at the pension agencies $20,000 to meet the very point made by the gentleman from Kansas. We hope that in the next bill we can reduce it still more, and if the policy which the Commissioner of Pensions says he intends to pursue, and has begun to carry out, is to be continued the genif the policy which the Commissioner of Pensions says he intends to pursue, and has begun to carry out, is to be continued the gentleman's objection will be entirely removed. It is absolutely impossible to carry out literally such a provision of law as the gentleman proposes. As I understand it, his amendment proposes to strike out the words "as nearly as practicable," and to make it compulsory that the amount of clerk hire for each agency shall be in exact proportion to the number of pensioners paid at the agency. Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If, under the law, all pensions are now paid in like manner, namely, by mail, why should any more clerks be needed in proportion to the number of pensioners at the New York agency than at the Iowa or the Kansas agency? And does not the fact that all pensioners are now paid by mail make my amendment good?

does not the fact that all pensioners are now paid by mail make my amendment good?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But you would make an arbitrary rule. The language is "as nearly as practicable," and nobody would want to do it any more nearly than was practicable, but there may be reasons why there should not be exactly the same number of clerks at each agency in proportion to the number of pensioners paid. I do not see why any gentleman should insist on having it any more direct than it is.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE] give his attention a moment? The Chair understands that the provision in the bill as reported is an exact repetition of a provision of existing law—the proviso in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I so understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment could not be enter-

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I so understand. The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment could not be entertained

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I made the point of order against it in ample time. Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The amendment simply conforms to the ruling of the Chair on a former occasion that a provision of this kind is simply a direction as to how the money appropriated should be paid. I believe this same question was raised when the Post-Office bill was pending here a few years ago; and the point of order was overruled at that time on the ground that the amendment was not a change of existing law in the sense contemplated by the rule, but was simply a direction as to how the money appropriated should be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair never made any ruling of that kind.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No, the present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time. I find that the rulings of different Chairman are times to the chair that the rulings of different Chairman are than the chair that the rulings of different Chairman are the chair than the rulings of different Chairman are the rules of the chair than the rulings of different Chairman are the rules of the r has expended in New York nearly twice as much as—at least onethird more than—at any other agency in this country.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It will be time enough then to correct the matter

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I think it would be best to correct it now.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I understand that one of my colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Blue], desires to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, when the subcommittee submitted this bill to the general committee it was the understanding that the Commissioner of Pensions should further consider the ques-tion of rents and furnish information whether or not that item could be reduced. I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee whether that information has been furnished?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I have the information here. I apologize to the gentleman for neglecting to hand him the paper before. I should have done so.

Mr. BLUE. Upon a hasty examination of this paper, I find nothing to indicate that a reduction in the rents can be made. I nothing to indicate that a reduction in the rents can be made. I wish to say, however, that the change of law providing for payment of pensioners by mail instead of payment in person must in some instances have rendered it unnecessary to continue to use all the office room heretofore provided. It is also a fact that some of the public buildings which have been in course of construction—including, I assume, the one at Detroit—must soon be in a condition to supply offices for the Government, and among others, offices for the pension agents. This statement just handed to me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not say when that will be accomplished. But at this time, not wishing to retard the passage of tleman from Pennsylvania does not say when that will be accomplished. But at this time, not wishing to retard the passage of this bill, I will not offer any amendment. I suggest, however, that hereafter, if it be ascertained that it can be done, a provision reducing the appropriation for rent be incorporated in the bill.

In reply to some remarks of my colleague from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], who doubtless made his criticism in good faith, I wish to say that in considering the appropriation embraced in this bill "for stationery and other necessary expenses, $35,000," we added $5,000 at the suggestion of the Commissioner for the purpose, in the main, of giving him a force to be used at his discretion—for the employment of extra clerks when needed for the expeditious distribution of the vouchers.

The Commissioner gave us clearly to understand that the force at New York, Boston, and other places in the East should be cut down so as to correspond as nearly as possible with the number of pensioners paid. I apprehend an investigation would show that the Commissioner would be justified in making slight discriminations or differences in the expenses of different offices.

The salaries at New York would perhaps be in excess of what they necessarily should be at Topeka.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. As all the clerks are under the civil service, why should they receive any more in New York than in Kansas? Those in Kansas are just as efficient as those in New York.

Mr. BLUE. It would seem to be obvious that, in view of the difference in expenses of living, wages in New York might properly be higher than in Kansas or some other Western localities. By reason of surrounding circumstances it might be necessary that a clerk employed in an office in New York City should be paid a larger salary than a clerk of like efficiency in the city of Topeka.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the gentleman know that under the civil-service law the salaries of all clerks are graded?

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman will find, upon an investigation of this matter, that discretion is given to the Commissioner here; and, under his manipulation, he can protect the clerks, as his evidence shows.

evidence shows

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It is his "manipulation" that we are finding fault with.

Mr. BLUE. Oh, well, it may be necessary manipulation.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary that he should have discretion, in emergencies, to provide assistants not covered by the civil-service rules.

I think this bill has been carefully examined in every detail. We have not cut down the amount that has been required for the payment of pensions at all. The reductions which have been made in the branches of the expenditures of the Department relate to clerk hire, to lights, examining surgeons, and so on, and we have given all of these items very careful consideration. I apprehend that it will be found, when the bill is carefully examined by the gentleman, as good as it could possibly be made under the we reduced the last item, as the gentleman will remember, $20,000 on his testimony. The Commissioner desired the appropriation to remain the same as before, in order that he, in the exercise of sound discretion, might advance some of the salaries. But on an examination of the matter we thought it important that the change suggested here should be made, and believed it to be imprudent and unwise not to cut out the amount we thought it safe and prudent to cut out. This was done in the interest of economy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will my colleague from Pennsylvania allow

Mr. BINGHAM. Will my colleague from Pennsylvania allow me to occupy five minutes?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Certainly; I yield five minutes. Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to delay the passage of this appropriation bill. I feel it incumbent upon me, however, to submit to the House a single statement. There is no official or public document issued or uttered by our Government that has either the signification or general circulation, careful reading, as well as retention in public libraries and the general depositories of public records, as the message of the President of the United States. It is read and discussed by the civilized world. At the commencement of this Administration, at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, which was the first annual message of the President, covering the general subjects submitted for the consideration of Congress, the President in his message used this language:

I am unable to understand why frauds in the pension rolls should not be exposed and corrected with thoroughness and vigor. * * * Thousands of neighborhoods have their well-known fraudulent pensioners, and recent developments by the Bureau establish appalling conspiracies to accomplish pension frauds. By no means the least wrong done is to brave and deserving pensioners, who certainly ought not to be condemned to such association.

In the appropriation bills for the three full years wherein this Administration has been disbursing the public funds through its appointed subordinates, the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the executive, judicial, and legislative bill, fully recognizing the serious character of these utterances of the President of nizing the serious character of these utterances of the President of the United States, increased the appropriations for making special investigations pertaining to the Pension Bureau from $225,000, which includes the deficiency, to $400,000 for the fiscal year of 1894, to $500,000 for the fiscal year of 1895, the same sum of $500,000 for the fiscal year of 1896, and also provided for the appointment of 150 special examiners at an expenditure of $195,000. In other words, the Congress of the United States gave, in its appropriations for examination by special detailed examiners of the Pension Bureau, which had immediately and specifically in charge the investigation of pension frauds, more than was asked for by the Pension Bureau of the Department of the Interior.

I take the reports for the three full years of the administration of the Pension Bureau under the present Administration of Presiof the Pension Bureau under the present Administration of President Cleveland, desiring the House to bear in mind the serious charge contained in this message to which I have referred, as it came to the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, and will quote briefly from them. In 1894, the first full year, I find this: Convictions had, 194; sentences imposed, 120. In 1895, convictions had, 294; sentences imposed, 214. In 1896, convictions had, 167; sentences imposed, 160. That is the record of the investigations of the Pension Bureau pertaining to these "conspiracies" alleged, and the result being the statement that I have submitted. The President in his message to Congress yesterday—and I desire only that these groupings of facts, figures, and utterances may be of record for future reference—the President submits:

The Commissioner of Pensions reports that during the last fiscal year 329 indictments were found against violators of the pension laws. Under these indictments 167 convictions resulted.

Gentlemen, in view of that exhibit under this Administration, can anyone in this House credit the statement contained in the message to the second session of the Fifty-third Congress:

Thousands of neighborhoods have their well-known fraudulent pensioners, and recent developments by the Bureau establish appalling conspiracies to accomplish pension frauds.

I have given you the statement of the President as exhibited in I have given you the statement of the President as exhibited in his former message. I give it to you as exhibited in his last annual message, showing 167 convictions, and I submit also to you the fact that every dollar asked for by this Administration for the detection of pension frauds has been appropriated by the Democratic House of the Fifty-third Congress and by the Republican House of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and we find, after three years of consistent effort, 167 convictions out of a roll, "on June 30, 1896," as the President states it, of "970,678 pensioners." This is the largest number ever reported. I leave the question for your reflection. [Applause.]

And then, on motion of Mr. William A. Stone, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Dingley, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9473) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment and with the recommendation that the same do pass. Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: It is true, is it not, that we called the Commissioner of Pensions before us twice, with reference to this very matter, and went carefully over the entire ground with him?

Mr. BLUE. It is true, as the gentleman from Ohio has stated, that we called the Commissioner of Pensions before us twice, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

USE OF ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the joint resolution submitted with the report I made a short time ago be laid before the Senate, and if there is no objection I shall ask to have it passed this morning. The joint resolution (S. R. 162) continuing in force section 2 of the act approved June 3, 1896, entitled "An act to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows: length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of section 2 of the act approved June 3, 1896, entitled "An act to repeal section 61 of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 28, 1894, be, and they are hereby, continued in force, and the joint select committee heretofore appointed under said section shall, when they have reached a final conclusion, report the same to Congress, together with such information as they shall have obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of the joint resolution reported by him this morning from the select committee. Is there objectively

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some explanation of the joint resolution. The resolution itself is rather ambiguous and I do not quite understand it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio was in when I submitted the report. It will be remembered that at the last session section 61 of the present tariff law, which provided for a rebate of the tax on alcohol used in the arts, was repealed, and at the same time a joint select committee was appointed to investigate the subject during the recess and to report at the beginning of the present session. From that committee this morning I made a partial report, showing what progress had been made, stating that the committee had been unable to complete their investigation and asking that their powers might be plete their investigation, and asking that their powers might be extended. The joint resolution simply extends the powers of the committee in order to enable them to complete their investigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the joint resolution. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MILLS. Let it be again most.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be again read.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question in respect to the joint resolution. What is the necessity for declaring by a joint resolution that an act of Congress shall continue in force?

ontinued in force.

Mr. HARRIS. Ah!
Mr. PLATT. That is all.
Mr. HARRIS. That explanation is satisfactory.
The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be directed to inquire whether the existing agreement of the so-called Joint Traffic Association, formed by the principal railroad companies of the country, provides against competition by a stipulation that every railroad company which is a party thereto shall make and maintain such transportation rates as may be prescribed by a majority of the board of managers, consisting of representatives, one from each of said railroads, and provides for enforcing such stipulation by imposing fines in money upon an offending company, to be collected from contributions paid by such company into a common fund, which fines are to accrue to the benefit of the other companies; and if such are found to be the terms of the agreement, to inquire further whether such a stipulation is a violation of the prohibition of the law of Congress against the pooling of freights or the division of earnings by interstate railroads, and if so, whether the illegality has been sufficiently proved in the litigation pending in the southern district of New York; and whether in such litigation the Government is sufficiently represented by adequate counsel; and whether any legislation is needed to expedite the proceedings and to enforce any violated provision of law against said Joint Traffic Association; and said committee is hereby further directed, as incident to said inquiry, to ascertain whether or not, since the agreement of said Joint Traffic Association was made, the flour millers of the country have entered into a similar agreement, whereby the price of flour is to be maintained by each miller at a rate to be fixed by the managers of the Millers' Association, and obedience to said agreement is to be secured by money fines imposed upon an offending company, to be collected from a fund composed of contributions of a certain sum on each barrel of flour produced, which contributions are the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

I will simply say that I undertook to see, and supposed I had made proper provision to see, that the parties interested in the bill should have a hearing, but after I left last spring by accident the report was made. I have the consent of the Senator who reported the bill, and also of the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator please state his request?

Mr. HOAR. I request that a bill to authorize a reliquidation of certain entries of merchandise, which was indefinitely postponed at the last session, may be brought again before the Senate, that the vote postponing it be reconsidered, and the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance. There was a mistake in not having a hearing of the parties, and the member of the committee who made the report, and the chairman also, consent to a recommittal. recommittal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the order will be made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senat I should like to inquire of the Senator

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Committee reports this bill?
Mr. PETTIGREW. The Committee on Indian Affairs.
Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I should like to inquire under the rule what jurisdiction the Committee on Indian Affairs ever had of this matter?

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is a matter with regard to the disposition of Indian reserve lands.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask should not this matter have gone to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will inform the Senator that the bill did go to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee thought it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and reported it back to the Senate, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration. Then the Senate referred it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have reported it back to this body favorably.

Mr. BERRY. There was a House bill pending before the Committee on Public Lands, I think of the same character, object, mittee on Public Lands, I think of the same character, object, and tenor as the pending bill, which that committee declined to report. There was never any direct vote taken upon whether it should be reported or not, but it was agreed that it should go over, as I understood. A bill has been passed through the House of Representatives in regard to Oklahoma Territory.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will inform the Senator that this is the bill which was before the Committee on Public Lands, from the further consideration of which the Committee on Public Lands asked to be discharged, and it was then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now ask unanimous consent—
Mr. LODGE. I ask for the regular order.
Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the bill the consideration of which I have asked be made the order of business after disposing of the immigration bill. This bill was recommended by the platforms of both political parties during the last Presidential contest, and it at least ought to be considered by this body. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be made the special order after disposing of the immigration bill, which I special order after disposing of the immigration bill, which I understand is the unfinished business.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me this bill ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands and be investigated, so that we may be informed what is to be paid for these lands, how many acres there are, and all about the subject.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a report here which answers every question the Senator suggests, and there are letters from the Department. The bill has already passed the House of Representatives resentatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to by him be made the special order immediately following the final disposal of the bill known as the immigration bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made. The Calendar under Rule VIII is the regular order, and the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

HEIRS OF EASKINE S. ALLIN AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 1168) for the relief of the heirs of Erskine S. Allin and the United States Regulation Firearms Company, respectively, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee was announced as list in order, and the senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear either the report or some explanation of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this matter has come up hurriedly, but I think I remember the facts relating to it sufficiently to make an explanation.

Erskine S. Allin invented an improvement in breech-loading firearms. He was master armorer at the United States Armory at Springfield. He was not employed to make this invention; it was not suggested to him; he made it in his own time; it was his own invention, and under the law he had a perfect title to it. He gave a license to the Government to use his invention. No compensation, however, was paid to him by the Government. The Government, aside from using his invention in its own arms, sold to the French Government arms to which the invention had been applied. Twenty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty-seven of these fire-arms containing the improvement were sold to the Government of arms containing the improvement were sold to the Government of France. This Government made a profit on the transaction of $209,889.54. Colonel Benét, who was Chief of Ordnance when this matter was first before Congress, reported that 10 cents a gun was fair compensation to the inventor.

Allin died. In the Forty-ninth Congress we passed a bill in the Senate giving to his heirs, his widow and daughter, who are poor, $30,000 as compensation. That, however, did not include claims for the arms which have been sold to the French Government. Since then a company known as the United States Regulation Firearms

Company, to which the right other than that of the Government Company, to which the right other than that of the Government to use the invention was assigned, have also come in and made claim for compensation. The bill referred to the committee called for $200,000. The committee, looking the thing over very carefully, thought that it was but fair that the Government should pay the heirs of Allin, his widow and daughter, $30,000, and should pay $30,000 to the United States Regulation Firearms Company. So they report $60,000—half to be paid to the widow and daughter, and half to the United States Regulation Firearms Company.

The Government sold these guns, made a large profit on them, and the Chief of Ordnance said, as I have stated, that 10 cents a gun is a fair royalty for the Government to pay. The sum which the committee report, however, does not amount to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not this only one of a large number of claims for improvements in the Springfield musket, and if we pay this claim will it not be a precedent for the payment of the others

Mr. PLATT. There have been in times past a large number of claims made, and some have been paid. I remember one of $75,000 was paid, the Ely claim, as it was called, in which General Butler was interested; but so far as I know—and I think I can state without reservation on that subject-this is the last of all those claims, out reservation on that subject—this is the last of all those claims, and it seems to me a very meritorious one.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see that this bill proposes to pay $60,000. I think the report made in the Forty-ninth Congress proposed to pay only $30,000. It seems that this report now proposes to double the amount to be paid.

Mr. PLATT. I tried to explain that, but I presume the Senator did not hear. It is very difficult to be heard in the Senate, anyway.

We did report $30,000 as compensation which the Government ought to pay to the widow and the daughter of the inventor. We did not then take into consideration the claim which is now made did not then take into consideration the claim which is now made did not then take into consideration the claim which is now made on account of the fact that the Government sold 28,287 of these arms to the French Government. The United States Regulation Firearms Company comes in and claims that from the Government. We have looked the matter over and tried to do equity between these parties, and the committee propose to give $30,000 to the widow and daughter of Allin and $30,000 to the United to the widow and daughter of Ring.

States Regulation Firearms Company.
Mr. COCKRELL. How does the United States Regulation Fire-patent? Mr. PLATT. It was the assignee of all the interests which the inventor had, except that which he had assigned to the Government-the right to use. The Government not only used it in its own arms, but sold arms upon which it made a profit of $209,889.54. Mr. COCKRELL. If we are paying for all the Government used and then turning around and paying for all the Government sold, that is a double payment, is it not?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no. Two hundred thousand dollars would scarcely amount to a full payment for what the Government sold.

We have cut down the amount claimed very much.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point is this: If payment is made for all that the Government used and the arms that were sold to the French Government were included in that amount, then certainly the assignees have no right to come in and claim that because the arms were sold they should be paid again.

Mr. PLATT. I have tried to say—this bill came up very unexpectedly—that, as I understand it, we are not paying twice over. Indeed, we are not paying the full amount the Government ought

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask that the latter part of the report, beginning on page 5, may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

The bill recommended by the committee was, after thorough discussion, passed by the Senate, but was not acted on in the House. The same bill was introduced in the next session, when a bill to compensate the United States Regulation Firearms Company for the use by the United States of the same invention was also introduced, and both bills were referred to the Patent Committee and hearings had thereon, but no report made. The same bills were introduced at the next session. The bill now referred to the committee proposes that there shall be paid for the use of this invention by the United States the sum of $20,000, one half to the widow and daughter of Erskine S. Allin, and the other half to the United States Regulation Firearms Company. Upon the hearing before the Patent Committee in the Forty-ninth Congress no mention was made of the fact that there had been an assignment by Erskine S. Allin of his interest in this invention other than his iteense to the Government. But upon hearings at the next session of Congress, and upon the present bill, it appears that in December, 1868, Allin assigned to the United States Regulation Firearms Company aforesaid all the right, title, and interest which he had in the invention, so that his title to the same, and to the letters patent subject to the right of the Government to use the same under his license, passed to the United States Regulation Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a contract with Colt's Firearms Company aforesaid, which in 1871 made a co

the Government of France, in the year 1871, 28,287 firearms containing this improvement for the sum of $610,998,20, which was at the rate of $21,60 each. Colonel Benton, formerly superintendent of the Springfield Armory, was requested by Hon. George W. McCrary, Secretary of War, to state the cost of the manufacture of this gun to the Government, and made a report, which is to be found in Senate Ex. Doc. No. 17, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, showing that the cost to the United States Government of a Springfield breech-loading gun manufactured at the Springfield Armory was $14.18 each, and that the changing of the old muzzle-loading guns used by the Government into breech-loading guns containing this improvement was $4.28 each, and that the changing of the old muzzle-loading guns used by the Government into breech-loading guns containing this improvement was $4.28 each.

From this report of Colonel Benton it would appear that the United States realized a profit upon the guns sold of at least $4.29 per gun, amounting to sell firearms containing this improvement, but merely to make and use the same. The sale of this gun was an infringement of the patent. In addition to the guns sold as aforesaid large numbers were distributed to the States, and the committee is of the opinion that such distribution of the guns was not within the license given by Allin. No money was paid by the United States Regulation Firearms Company to Allin upon the conveyance of his interest in the invention and letters patent, but there was an agreement that he should receive one-third of the profits which the company should make in the manufacture and sale of guns.

The committee are of the opinion that both the heirs of Erskine S. Allin and the United States Regulation Firearms Company have a just claim for compensation from the United States. It is difficult to establish the precise amount which should be paid to each of them, but considering all the circumstances of the case, the committee is of opinion that the sum of $30,000 is no

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendments reported by the Committee on Patents be acted upon.

The PRESIDING ÖFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Patents will be stated.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Patents were, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "sixty;" in line 5, after the words "to wit," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty;" and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Allin, of Springfield, Mass., and Augusta M. Ladd, of Holyoke, Mass., respectively widow and daughter of the late Erskine S. Allin, said Allin being the inventor of valuable improvements used in the manufacture of the Springfield breech-loading rifle musket, for which improvements letters patent numbered 49959 were granted to him by the United States on the 19th day of September, 1865; and $30,000 to be paid to the United States Regulation Firearms Company, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, for the injury caused to, and damage sustained by, said corporation from and by the infringement by the United States of the letters patent aforesaid, which said letters patent were assigned by the said Erskine S. Allin to the said United States Regulation Firearms Company on the 18th day of December, 1868. This appropriation to be in full payment and satisfaction to both of the aforesaid parties for and on account of any and all sales or other disposition heretofore made or that may hereafter be made by the United States of any arms in which the invention secured by said letters patent is used or embraced.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were agreed to. Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out, beginning in line 17, after the name "New York," down to and including the word said," in line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. After the name "New York," in line 17, it is proposed to strike out "for the injury caused to, and damage sustained by, said corporation from and by the infringement by the United States of the letters patent aforesaid."

Mr. PLATT. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 183, being the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Government and provide against a deficiency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill

Mr. ALLEN. I move to take up the bill notwithstanding tho objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the bill be now taken up and considered by the Senate, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. PLATT. I think, if a motion is made to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection, that the bill ought to be read, so that the Senate may know what the bill is other than by its title. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill is asked for the information of the Senate. The Secretary will read the bill and the amendment.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows, reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

mittee on Finance with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the mints of the United States shall be open to the coinage of silver, and there shall be coined dollars of the weight of 412; grains troy, of standard silver, nine tenths fine, as provided by the act of January 18, 1837, and upon the same terms and subject to the limitations and provisions of law regulating the coinage and legal-tender quality of gold; and whenever the said coins herein provided for shall be received into the Treasury, certificates may be issued therefor in the manner now provided by law.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall coin into standard silver dollars, as soon as practicable, according to the provisions of section 1 of this act, from the silver bullion purchased under authority of the act of July 14, 1890, entitled "An act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes," that portion of said silver bullion which represents the seigniorage or profit to the Government, to wit, the difference between the cost of the silver purchased under said act and its coinage value, and said silver dollars so coined shall be used in the payment of the current expenses of the Government; and for the purpose of making the said seigniorage immediately available for use as money, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue silver certificates against it, as if it was already coined and in the Treasury.

Sec. 3. Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the objection which I made to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2749) to temporarily increase revenue to meet the expenses of Gov-enment and provide against a deficiency. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the amendment to the bill which was reported by the Committee on Finance? Was it read?

Several SENATORS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was merely read for information.

Mr. VEST. I came into the Senate while the reading was being proceeded with. Then the vote would be upon the amendment first, if the bill is taken up?

Mr. PLATT. I understand the Senator from Nebraska asked unanimous consent to take up the bill.

Mr. MILLS. He moved to take it up.
Mr. PLATT. I understand he requested unanimous consent.
The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] then asked that the bill might go over. Then the Senator from Nebraska moved to take it up notwithstanding the objection. The Senator from Rhode Island has now withdrawn his objection. So the question, I suppose, is upon the request of the Senator from Nebraska for

I suppose, is upon the request of the Senator from Nebraska for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PALMER. I object to taking up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the present consideration of the bill, the question recurs upon the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, if he shall renew it.

Mr. ALLEN. I renew the motion. Let me say in this connection the motion being hefore the Senato.

Mr. ALLEN. I renew the motion. Let me say in this connection, the motion being before the Senate—
Mr. HARRIS (to Mr. ALLEN). Your motion is not debatable.
Mr. GALLINGER. It is not debatable.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable if the point is raised.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I have no desire to debate it. I ask for a vote by yeas and nays on the question of taking up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question to the Senate. Unanimous consent was asked by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Allen] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 2749, to which objection was made. The Senator from Nebraska now moves to take up the bill, notwithstanding the objection. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill? On that question the yeas and nays are

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Colorado were present.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] is recorded as having voted?

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that a pair has been transferred to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I undertook to transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMillan] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees], but the Senator from Michigan has since come into the Chamber, so that he and I have voted. The Senator from Florida [Mr. Pasco] now transfers his pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. Wilson] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees].

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. PASCO. It was with that understanding that I voted.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the bill and amendments be committed to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to that committee to report the bill back without amendment.
Mr. VEST. Without amendment?

Mr. VEST. Without amendment? Mr. ALDRICH. To report back the House bill without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island what has taken place since the bill was reported which requires its recommitment at this time?

Mr. ALDRICH. I never have agreed to the report. I was in favor of reporting the bill without amendment at the time. I think the Senate upon further consideration will agree with me rather than with the majority of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. I remember your distinctive.

Mr. ALLEN. I remember very distinctly, I think, that the Senator from Rhode Island at the last session of Congress was Senator from Rhode Island at the last session of Congress was among the most ardent advocates of the speedy taking up of the bill and putting it upon its passage. Now, since that time we have had an election in this country, and our Republican friends have said and are saying now that the most urgent need is a revision of our tariff laws. I do not myself believe that. However, I am perfectly willing as one Senator to give them ample opportunity at this time to bring the pending bill before the Senate and have it discussed and amended in such respect as they

Senate and have it discussed and amended in such respect as they may see fit and place it upon its passage.

We have almost ninety days yet in which to perfect this tariff measure. There is not the slightest reason of which I can conceive why the country should be burdened with an extraordinary session of Congress. It has gone out from the powers that be in the Republican party that with the incoming Administration we are to have an extraordinary session of Congress for the purpose of revising the tariff laws. This bill received the careful consideration of the House of Representatives and passed that body. It received the careful consideration of the Committee on Finance and was reported back to the Senate, and the chairman of that committee on two separate occasions undertook to bring it up for consideration. I, among others, voted against it, not believing that it was necessary to take up the bill. We have a right to suppose that the Republican party is in as good condition to-day, fresh from the November elections, to take up and consider this important matter as it will be in three or four months from now.

Now, I do not propose as one member of this body to put an obstruction in the pathway of the consideration of the proposed tariff act. I do not commit myself to its policy nor to its provisions, nor will I commit myself to the doctrine advocated so ably by my distinguished friend the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]. But neither he nor his party must have it said that so far as the Populist representation in this Chamber is concerned the elightest electronic was placed in the rethrest of the conthe slightest obstruction was placed in the pathway of the consideration of this important measure.

Our friends on the other side of the Chamber say that the country needs tariff legislation. For three years, yea, almost for four years, our country has been bleeding at every pore. Our industries are prostrate; our people are upon the verge of bankruptcy. You have it your power now within the next three or four weeks to give the country relief if your theory of taxation be true. Why do you shrink from it? Is it so complicated that you can not formulate a bill or proper amendments within the next three or four weeks or within a month? If your arguments on the hustings this fall were true, why are you not prepared now to go forward and consider this bill and speedily put it upon its passage and give the country relief?

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to commit the bill, with its amendments, to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report it back to the Senate without amendment

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the House bill be recommitted with instructions to report it back without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays.
Mr. HARRIS. Are the yeas and nays demanded upon the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island?
Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.
Mr. HARRIS. The question, I apprehend, is divisible. The question to refer is one matter. To refer with the instructions which the Senator from Rhode Island suggests is a very different matter. I should like how the control of the divisible of the control of the suggests is a very different matter.

which the Senator from Khode Island suggests is a very different matter. I should like to have the question divided.

I have no objection to the recommittal of the bill, but to recommit it with instructions that the committee is to do nothing but report the bill back without amendment is a farce. The bill is now here with an amendment, and a single vote of the Senate can dispose of the amendment. But if the committee shall report it back without amendment, there is not a Senator on this floor who will not have the right to reintroduce the amendment and compel will not have the right to reintroduce the amendment and compel a vote of the Senate, so as to invoke the judgment of the majority. I am opposed to sending the bill back to the committee with any such instructions.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not able just now to put my hand upon the rule, but my impression is that under the rules and practice of the Senate a motion to recommit with instructions is not divisible.

Mr. HALE. It is a single motion.

Mr. HALE. It is a single motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a single motion, and is not divisible.

Mr. HALE. The whole essence of the motion is the instruction.

It is not a divisible question.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not sure. There are here two distinct phases and questions, and where a question contains more than one proposition, it is and has always been, and in the nature of things must always be, divisible.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee, that Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee, that where a motion covers two distinct propositions or branches it is clearly divisible. But this motion has but one thing in it, and that is to refer with instructions. If you treat it as two propositions and divide it, you have an entirely distinct thing, which was not within the contemplation of the mover of the motion. There is simply a single idea conveyed in the motion, to refer with instructions, instructing directly the committee, and clearly to me, Mr. President, it is not divisible.

Mr. HARRIS. It takes one vote to send the bill back with or without instructions. One single vote will likewise determine the question whether the single amendment reported by the committee shall be agreed to or rejected. It seems to me that it is a mittee shall be agreed to or rejected. It seems to me that it is a farce, and worse than a farce, to send it back to the committee in order that the committee may report it back to the committee in order that the committee may report it back without an amendment which the Senate can dispose of just as readily, as the amendment now pending can be disposed of just as soon as the question of recommittal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question. The object of dividing questions which are submitted is to preserve in every respect the rights of Senators. Now, when a Senator moves to commit with instructions, from the fact that under the rule all amendments are receivable as to the instructions, does not that of itself preserve the rights which are intended to be preserved by general serve the rights which are intended to be preserved by general parliamentary law in dividing a question?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course, the question of instructions, if instructions are to be given, is as amendable as the motion itself, and it would be perfectly in order, in my opinion, to move to amend in respect to the instructions which are to be given. But I see no necessity for instructions at all. Let the bill go to the committee. If the Senator desires that it shall go back, I have no objection to its being recommitted. But I am utterly opposed to sending it back with instructions to report in a given way. If a majority of the Senate is in favor of the bill being presented in the given way suggested, why not dispose of that question here and now? A majority can put the bill in any form it chooses. It is absurd to talk about sending it back with instructions to report without amendment. amendment

Mr. ALDRICH. I will suggest that if we can get a vote upon the main question I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, to proceed to that

Mr. CHANDLER. I am in favor of accepting the offer of the Senator from Nebraska, if it is made in good faith. The Senator says that he will cooperate to remove the obstacle to the passage of the bill. The Senator said that there had been an election in the country, and that election bound the Republican party to reverse leading. enue legislation. The Senator was right about it. also, the Senator will notice, was a decision of the country that it would not have the free coinage of silver by the United States

The amendment which provides for such free coinage is the only obstruction to the passage of the bill. Now the Senator offers to remove that obstruction. If he means by that that he will give us his vote and the vote of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to throw that amendment as proposed by the committee off of the bill, or if there can be unanimous consent from other Senators who agree with the Senator from Nebraska that that amendment shall be dropped, then certainly this side of the Chamber is ready to proceed immediately, day by day and hour by hour, until the bill is disposed of. I ask the Senator whether when he said he would help to remove the obstruction to the passage of the bill he meant that he was willing that the freecoinage amendment, against which the people voted, should be removed by his consent?

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire does not quote my language correctly. I did not say that I would help to remove any obstruction to the passage of the bill. I said that so far as I was concerned no obstruction should be placed in its pathway

I do not regard the question of free silver as having been settled. I think the imagination of my friend from New Hampshire is altogether too poetic. It is a very important question in this country. It cast over 6,000,000 votes at the last election, and it is to-day about the most healthy question I know of that is before the country

What I mean to say is this, Mr. President, and I say it in all candor. I do not believe that this country can receive relief from any kind of tariff. I think the man who lays that unction to his soul will be mistaken. We have in circulation barely sixteen hundred million dollars in our country, with 72,000,000 of population. You can not bring prosperity to the country by letting the volume of money remain stationary and increasing the burden of taxation upon articles that the people consume. I am so firmly convinced of that fact that I want to see our Republican friends get in the saddle as soon as possible.

I say that I do not believe you want to revise the tariff. I do not by that intend to impugn your motives in the slightest not by that intend to impugn your motives in the slightest degree.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then why does not the Senator cooperate to get free silver, which is not a tariff measure, off the bill, and see whether we want to revise the tariff? He can tell very quickly, if we get rid of his obstructive amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I will cooperate with the Senator from New

Mr. ALLEN. I will cooperate with the Senator from New Hampshire and his party in my own way. It is not necessary for me to bow my head and wear a Republican yoke and follow the dictation of the Republican party. I will not do that. I say that no obstruction in the nature of dilatory tactics, so far as I am concerned, shall prevent you from taking up the tariff question and considering it at an early day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I say to you again—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?
Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Nebraska and his friends, or he himself, consent to have a vote taken upon the pending bill to-day, or at any time to be fixed, or upon the amendment at any time to be fixed?
Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the bill ought to be discussed for a rea-

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the bill ought to be discussed for a reasonable length of time.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He is here this morning as an advocate, I understand, of immediate tariff legislation. Will he consent—that is the practical diate tariff legislation. Will he consent—that is the practical question—to taking a vote upon the pending bill and its amendment now or at any other time?

Mr. ALLEN. So far as I am concerned—and I can only speak for myself—I am prepared to vote upon this bill or upon any other tariff measure you can submit within two weeks after you have presented it here in print.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill is before the Senate, and it has been before it for many months. I ask the Senator if he will consent to take a vote upon it now, without any further discussion?

Mr. ALLEN. At this precise moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; or at a time now to be fixed by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, Mr. President, it is idle to ask a question of that kind. The Senator from Rhode Island knows quite well that his party does not intend to support this bill without amendment. I understand the Republican caucus in this Chamber has abandoned the bill.

him would allow us to do so. Now, there is an evidence of good

Mr. ALLEN. Will you say to the country that it is a tariff bill which you pass at this session of Congress that you are willing to be bound by during the next four years of the incoming Administration?

Mr. GALLINGER and others. No, no.
Mr. ALLEN. No; that will not be done. Mr. President, that Mr. ALLEN. No; that will not be done. Mr. President, that question provokes almost universal laughter from the other side of the Chamber. You said to the country when you were arguing the great political questions before it this fall that you would at the first moment take up the tariff question and settle it permanently, and now you laugh at the statement when your attention is called to it. What is there about the tariff question that would require Congress to greatly a second six a second six and settle in the statement. require Congress to spend six or seven months in extraordinary session to consider it? However it may be regarded by some, it is certainly not in the hands of our Republican friends a difficult problem to solve in the light of their knowledge of this question. Why not introduce the McKinley bill, the panacea for all national evils, and send it to the committee, and have it revised and preevils, and send it to the committee, and have it revised and presented here within the next ten days, and let it be debated and put upon its passage within the next sixty days? Do you want to burden the country again with an extraordinary session of Congress? Do you want to sit here for ninety days practically idle and let the country suffer when you have it in your power within that time to put upon its passage an intelligent and revised tariff act?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Nebraska is making a decla-

mr. Alderich. The senator from Nebraska is making a declaration of his purpose for himself, I suppose, and his friends.

Mr. ALLEN. Of my purpose only.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be glad to ask him a question, which perhaps under other circumstances might be deemed impertinent. I should like to ask him whether he will vote for the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, or for the McKinley bill, or for any bill that receives the approval of the Republicans of Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would not be guilty of making such a promise as that I would agree to vote for any other bill that might be presented.

Mr. ALDRICH. This bill, then? I will confine my question to Mr. ALLEN. This bill, then? I will connine my question to the pending bill.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I will not vote for this bill in its present shape. You can, however, put it in a shape in which I will vote for it. You can, in my judgment, put it in such a shape as that other Senators will vote for it who are not members of your party. There is barely a difference of 10 per cent between the tariff act ther Senators will vote for it who are not members of your party. There is barely a difference of 10 per cent between the tariff act now in existence and the McKinley Act. Do you say that you can not revise your tariff schedules and put the act upon its passage during this Congress, and get this momentous question out of the road so that other important questions which may come before the next Congress may be properly considered?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see that it is altogether different when you ask the Republican party in the Senate, in a minority as it clearly is, to take up and consider and perfect a general tariff bill while the conditions are expected to be entirely changed in the next Congress? The Republican party expects to have an absolute majority in the Senate then.

Mr. ALLEN. May I be permitted to ask the Senator from Maine where he expects to get that majority?

Mr. HALE. I say the Republicans expect to get an absolute majority in the next Senate. Then it can take up the general question of revision of the tariff, and I have no doubt that it will. Now, all that is asked is the passage of the House bill—the Dingley bill, so called—as it came to this body, which is a revenue measure, a temporary measure in itself, so declared, a measure that was intended to endow a Democratic Administration with enough revenue to keep up and pay the housekeeping bills of the Government. If the Senator is in favor of that measure or if his friends. revenue to keep up and pay the housekeeping bills of the Government. If the Senator is in favor of that measure, or if his friends are in favor of it, we can come to a vote at once without further discussion. The Senator from Rhode Island can withdraw his discussion. The Senator from Rhode Island can withdraw his motion. We can have a yea-and-nay vote on the substitute of the committee, which is the free coinage of silver. If that is voted in, the bill goes into conference with the House. Something or nothing comes out of it, but the subject is ended. If that is voted down, we are brought face to face with the House proposition, the Dingley bill, the temporary revenue bill to furnish the Government with funds, and we can take a vote upon that at once. And why is not the Senator ready to agree that without further dis-Mr. GALLINGER. That is not true.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] says that is not true. I read it, however, in a Republican newspaper published in this city.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not true.

Mr. ALDRICH. We would pass this bill within a short time if the Senator from Nebraska and those gentlemen agreeing with why is not the Senator ready to agree that without further discussion we shall do that? Does not the Senator see that the Republican party is not in this Congress and in this body as it will be, or hopes to be, in the next Congress—able to consider and report

Mr. ALLEN. I think the Republican party is in better shape in this Chamber in the present Congress than it will be in the next.

That is my judgment.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Nebraska yields to me in order that I may move to amend the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island. I move to strike out that part of his motion that provides for instruction, and let the motion stand as a motion to recommit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee will be regarded as pending,
Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just one word more in reply to the Senator from Maine, so that my position—and I speak for myself alone—may be distinctly understood.
Mr. ALDRICH. I accept the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee. I withdraw that part of my motion.
Mr. ALLEN. The proposition of the Senator from Maine, if he will permit me to characterize it as such, is mere backing and filling. There is no substance to it whatever.
Mr. HALE. Why not?
Mr. ALLEN. I want you to bring before this Congress a permanent revenue measure.

manent revenue measure.

Mr. HALE. To begin with—
Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.
Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, he will see my purpose. I merely desire that the motion pending be stated from the chair. The Senator from Nebraska vielded to the Senator from Tennessee to move an amendment to the motion.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood that it was stated.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island accepted that amendment, as was his right.

Mr. HARRIS. Then let the pending question be stated.

Mr. HOAR. Now, I desire that the motion pending be stated from the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion pending is that the bill with its amendment be committed to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN. What I want the Republican party to do is to

Mr. ALLEN. What I want the Republican party to do is to present a permanent measure here.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me ask the Senator—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maine?
Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.
Mr. HALE. How can the Republican party in the Senate do that when it has not, to begin with, the control or the majority of the Committee on Finance? The Republican party can not get at this session a general revision of the tariff through its committees. We expect that this condition will be changed in the next Congress. Perhaps it will not be changed; it will be very close, undoubtedly; but I expect, and other Republicans expect, that in the next Congress, and early, too, the Republican party will have the doubtedly; but I expect, and other Republicans expect, that in the next Congress, and early, too, the Republican party will have the power through the committees in this body to report a general tariff bill. But it can not do it now. It has tried it and has found that the conditions here are such that it is utterly impossible. When the Senator asks the Republican party to do that he asks for what is evidently an impossibility. But we are ready to vote, and to vote at once, upon the proposition that is before the Senate—the proposition of free coinage. That is the first question presented before the Senate. If that is voted down, we can vote upon the House proposition—the Dingley bill. That is all we can do, sir, Mr. ALLEN. See how absurd is the position of the Senator from Maine! The Senator has just said that the opposition has control of the Finance Committee, that the Republican party can control of the Finance Committee, that the Republican party can not report from that committee a tariff measure. Why, then, is the Senator from Rhode Island moving to refer the bill back to the Finance Committee?

Mr. HALE. He moved its committal with instructions.
Mr. ALLEN. The Dingley bill is before the Senate now. That is quite an ample tariff act in itself. Why can you not use that as a foundation to introduce a permanent tariff measure in the form of an amendment, and discuss it here, and put it upon its

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. GORMAN. This is an important bill, and with a view of giving some of us an opportunity to look at it and taking it up to-morrow at 2 o'clock, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maryland to withdraw the motion, in order that I may move an executive session, so that nominations may be referred.

Mr. LODGE. Owing to confusion in the Chamber, I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Maryland.

The bill was read.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Immigration was, in line 7, after the word "following," to strike out:

All male persons between 16 and 60 years of age who can not both read and write the English language or some other language. But no parent of a person now living in, or hereafter admitted to, this country shall be excluded because of his inability to read and write.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to say, Mr. President, that the confusion in the Chamber was so great when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Gorman] made his request that I did not hear what he said. I only heard the motion to adjourn, followed by the motion to go into executive session. I happen to be in charge of this bill, which has been now for a long time at the head of the Calendar, and I am very anxious to get a vote upon it with the least possible delay. I therefore felt it my duty to resist those motions. I have since understood that the Senator from Maryland made a personal request that the bill should go over for a day, as he desired to look at it; and of course to such a personal request I should not think of making objection. I therefore will yield very gladly for a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 10, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 9, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev.

Henry N. Couden.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN RYAN.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, to the widow of John Ryan, deceased, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, who died August 10, 1896, a sum equal to his salary for six months and the expenses of his last illness and funeral, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $250.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the resolution referred to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BRUMM. I beg pardon, Mr. Ryan was on the soldiers' roll and died during the recess. This is the usual resolution. I desire to have it considered at the present time and passed.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I was present, but did not hear the resolution. I would be very glad to have it again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think that resolution had better take the usual course. There are similar resolutions constantly coming before the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. The usual course is to pass the resolution by mn. Bit Min. The distal course is to pass the resolution by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Was this person a member of what is called the "soldiers' roll?"

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I do not think it has been the usual course, certainly not in my time, to have these resolutions passed without reference to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BRUMM. All right, then, if you object.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

Mr. POOLE, Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report, for immediate consideration.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. B. 4354, "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

THEODORE L. POOLE,
W. S. KERR,
GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN,
Managers on the part of the House,
J. H. GALLINGER,
FRANK J. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the bill read, so as to see what change is involved.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would rather have the statement of the conferee The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill can be read. The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

statement of House conferees to accompany conference report on House bill No. 4354.

The House conferees recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same. The effect of the amendment is to grant a pension of $75 instead of $50.

THEODORE L. POOLE. W. S. KERR. GEO. B. MCCLELLAN.

The bill was read, as follows;

A bill (H. R. 4354) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Byt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Byt. Maj. Gep. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, how does that come before the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. It comes before the House on a report of a conference committee

Mr. HOPKINS. And do the conferees report the substitution of $75 for $50?
Mr. POOLE. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment, which makes it $75 a month.

Noonan, Northway,

Quigg,

Smith, Ill.

Sulzer,

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a matter that I think ought to be discussed. In the House I was in the Committee of the Whole when that matter was up, and after a full and fair discussion it was the sense of the House that $50 a month was suffi-

The SPEAKER. This is a conference report now before the House, and the gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, with Mr. McMILLIN. Twish to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. POOLE. I do.

Mr. McMILLIN. Was the soldier in the service of the Government at the time of his death?

Mr. POOLE. He was not in the service at the time of his

Mr. POOLE. He was not in the service at the time of his death.

Mr. McMILLIN. How long had he been out of the service? Mr. POOLE. He had been out of the service about twenty

Mr. McMILLIN. Did he die of injuries received in the service?
Mr. POOLE. It is very doubtful as to whether the cause of his death was the result of his service in the Army.
Mr. McMILLIN. Was he a pensioner at the time of his death?

He was. Mr. POOLE.

Mr. POOLE. He was.
Mr. McMILLIN. At what rate?
Mr. POOLE. Thirty dollars a month.
Mr. McMILLIN. Then it is proposed to give more than twice as much to his widow as he drew.
Mr. POOLE. That is the fact.
Mr. McMILLIN. The House bill proposed $50, the Senate amendment increases it to $75, and the House, pursuing the course that it always does in these cases, yielded from the struggle.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let us have the reason.

Mr. POOLE. This bill originally passed the House committee unanimously at $75 a month, but it passed the House at $50 a month. In the Senate it was amended and the amount was made • month. In the Senate it was amended and the amount was made $75 a month. The case of Mrs. Carr is a very peculiar one. General Carr was one of the best soldiers in the Army. He served with great gallantry from the commencement of the war to the close. His wife was with him in all the campaigns. She acted as volunteer nurse in the hospital of the Second Corps. General Carr commanded not only a brigade, but at times a division. He was a good soldier and did as good service as any man from New York or from any other State. He was wounded in several engagements and was entitled to a pension, but for years did not ask for it. Later, when he had become old and broken down in health, he did apply for a pension, and he then received the highest amount that could be granted him by the office under the law, which was $30 a month.

month.

Mr. HOPKINS. Did this officer leave the military service to go into the civil service?

Mr. POOLE. He was not in the Regular Army. He was a volunteer soldier and was mustered out of the service at the close of the war, and continued in civil life until his death. He was at time secretary of state of the State of New York. His wife is now old and broken down, and she has a permanently helpless daughter to support, with no income except what she receives by

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on a certain amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2901) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough, submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying conference report, namely:

On the amendment of the Senate the pension proposed to the claimant is increased from $30 per month, as the bill passed the House, to $50 per month. The managers on the part of the House have recommended that the House reason that the beneficiary is in feeble health, is 60 years of age, and without means except a pension of $17 per month, which is entirely unsufficient for her support. Her husband has a record of most honorable service, and the rate of $50 per month has been almost uniformly adopted by the Congress in cases of the widows of officers of like rank and like honorable service.

BENSON WOOD,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
WM. BAKER,
Managers on the part of the House,

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman permit a question or two be-

Mr. LOUD. With the gentleman permit a question of the fore the report is voted upon?

Mr. WOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman to state, if he can, of his own knowledge, whether the House has been able to secure any recession by the Senate from the position they have taken in any of these pension cases.

Mr. WOOD. I will state to the gentleman from California that this is the only conference committee upon which I have served, but the Record will answer his question. I can not answer it.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another point that I would like to bring to the gentleman's attention. In the statement which has been submitted the House conferees have assumed to review the position taken by the House and to give reasons of their own why they have recommended agreeing to the Senate amendment. It is hardly proper, in my opinion, for a conference committee to review the merits of the case and present opinions of their own as reasons why the House should accede to the demands of the Senate. I think that the same course has been pursued in this case that has been pursued in every case that has so far been presented to the House. The House, for instance, passes a bill granting a pension of $30 a month, the Senate increases the amount to $50 or $75 a month, and, with all due respect to our conference committees in these cases, it seems to me that they have exercised great diligence inendeavoring to give way to the will of the Senate. [Laughter.] I think, Mr. Speaker, that in future our conferees ought to try to maintain the dignity of the House. If we are right in passing a bill giving a pension of $30 a month, then when the Senate disagrees and a conference is ordered our conference committees should at least make an attempt to maintain the dignity of this body, and I trust they will do so. I hope also that hereafter no conference committee appointed by the House will undertake to present views of their own as a reason why the House should change its position as to any particular case.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the remarks of the gentleman from California are addressed rather to the future action of this House than to its action on the present case. All there is about this bill is that it makes provision for the widow of a soldier who was wounded in the service. The record of his of the Senate. I think that the same course has been pursued in this a soldier who was wounded in the service. The record of his service shows a participation in some twenty-odd battles. When his service ended he was chief of staff of an army corps. He enlisted originally as a private soldier, and was wounded as a private soldier. He was pensioned for wounds received in battle. From those wounds he died. His widow received the pension of his rank, which was $17 per month. That pension is insufficient for her to live upon. Quite an effort was made in the committee to increase this pension to $50; but the bill was finally reported at $30, and in that form passed the House without any opposition. I do not know that it would be proper to state what occurred in the conference committee; but it ought to be assumed that the managers on the part of the House made at least an honest effort to compromise the differences between the two Houses. They service shows a participation in some twenty-odd battles. * When to compromise the differences between the two Houses. They have reported the bill in its present form, and in view of what has happened this morning, as well as heretofore, I think the report ought to be concurred in.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. WOOD. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman says there was an effort to put this bill through at $50 when it was pending in committee or in the House; that that effort failed; that the committee and the House concurred in cutting down the amount of the pension to $30; that when the bill went to the Senate the amount was raised, as the record shows, to $50. Now, what I would like to know is this: What new fact or what new condition of affairs was developed in conference which can be presented to the House as a reason why the action of the House should be reversed and that of the Senate concurred in?

Mr. WOOD. Not necessarily anything new.
Mr. McMILLIN. Nothing whatever?

Mr. WOOD. I think sometimes it may be entirely proper for a conference committee to recommend receding without the development of any new facts.

Mr. McMILLIN. Without any new facts?

Mr. WOOD. I think so.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then it appears that in this case the committee of conference comes back and asks the House to recede without any new facts. If that is the case the House quelt to know it, and any new facts. If that is the case the House ought to know it, and I simply wished to elicit that state of the case.

Mr. WOOD. The House never passed this bill at $50 per month. The bill was not cut down by the House from $50 to $30.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not so state. I said the gentleman had stated that there was an effort in committee to get the bill in that form: that the the House concentration of the committee to the bill in that form; that then the House concurred in the action of the commit-tee. But I thought that if any facts had been developed by the committee of conference showing that the House had erred in its action those facts ought to be before the House. Otherwise it is presumable the House ought not to be asked to change its former action.

Mr. WOOD. I presume, then, on the theory of the gentleman from Tennessee, both Houses should adhere to their action; and the result would be that a conference committee would be entirely seless. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.
On motion of Mr. WOOD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,600 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. There being no unfinished business, the call of committees will be resumed. At the conclusion of this order of business yesterday the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey], representing the Committee on the Public Lands, had the floor.

GRANTING OF LANDS TO UNIVERSITY OF UTAH.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the bill (S. 2047) extending the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy lands heretofore granted to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy the lands granted to it by act of July 23, 1894, is hereby extended from five years to ten years thereafter; and the said act is so amended that instead of five years it shall read ten years.

Mr. LACEY. The report, which is very brief, will explain the purpose of this bill. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. Allen of Utah) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Allen of Utah) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2047) entitled "An act to extend the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy lands heretofore granted to it," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy certain lands granted to it by the act of July 23, 1894, shall be extended from five to ten years from the passage of said act of 1894.

Said act provides that the University of Utah shall occupy the lands thereby granted within five years. It appears to this committee that the university has not been able to meet the said condition of the grant, and probably will not be able to occupy these lands within the said five years.

The occupancy of these lands by the university involves a large outlay for buildings. At present the university is occupying buildings erected therefor by the State within the city of Salt Lake. The depression in business affairs, which commonly prevails, has made it impossible to sell the present site and buildings. With the new burdens imposed by admission to the Union, the State of Utah finds itself unable to proceed at once to build upon the lands given to the university by the United States. The lands which were granted to the State of Utah for university purposes by the enabling act for said State are not yet available and under the conditions which exist can not be for some time yet.

Mr. LACEY. I call for a vote.

Mr. LACEY. I call for a vote.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN TRAINING SCHOOL AT FORT BIDWELL.

Mr. LACEY. I now call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 152) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to use Fort Bidwell for an Indian training school.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That Fort Bidwell, an abandoned military reservation, in Modoc County, Cal., together with all the lands, buildings, water system, and improvements thereon be, and the same is hereby, turned over to the Secretary of the Interior, to be used for the purposes of an Indian training school.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as Strike out the words "be, and the same is hereby," in lines 6 and 7, and insert in lieu thereof the words "having been." Also in line 6, after the word "the," strike out the word "Secretary" and insert "Department;" and after the word "Interior," in line 6, insert "the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to use the same."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker— Mr. DINGLEY. One moment. This is a bill which can hardly come up during this hour. It should be on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole, because it involves, of course, more or less expenditure.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.
Mr. DINGLEY. Inevitably it does before we get through with it. I prefer the bill should not be considered during this hour, which is designed for business of another class.
Mr. LACEY Mr. Speaker this bill in the constant of the constant of the class.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the House Calendar, This is an abandoned military reservation which was turned over to the Department of the Interior to be sold. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs requested that there should be some delay made in selling the buildings, for the reason that there was need, in his judgment, for an Indian training school at that point. quently the Secretary of the Interior made an order postponing quently the Secretary of the Interior made an order postponing the sale of the reservation until the matter could be considered by Congress. They have requested that Congress give them authority to use the buildings for the purpose contemplated.

This joint resolution does not require them to be so used, but simply confers the authority on the Department for that purpose if, in its judgment, such course shall be desirable. The question of the appropriation for the support of the school, if raised at all, will be raised at another time and be of course considered by the Indian Committee hereafter. This simply, as I have said, confers the authority to delay the execution of the order of the Department for a time: that is to say, to saye the buildings and Department for a time; that is to say, to save the buildings and not allow them to be torn down and destroyed. But if the Interior Department deems it necessary, they have the privilege of using them for the purpose of a training school. That is all there is in it. The matter has been requested both by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine insist upon his point of order?

his point of order?

Mr. DINGLEY. On the statement of the gentleman from Iowa I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa aquestion: How many Indians are there in the vicinity of this proposed reservation?

Mr. LACEY. I am informed that there are from 1,200 to 1,500 Indians in the immediate vicinity of this reservation.

But I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARHAM], who is thoroughly conversant with the matter, and can answer in detail any question that may be asked in reference to it.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman just what is meant by an Indian "training" school. What kind of a school is it designed to be? We have already boarding and day schools for the Indians, but as far as I know we have no training schools.

Mr. BARHAM. There are twelve or fifteen hundred Indians in the immediate neighborhood of this Fort Bidwell. It is situated in the northeastern portion of the State of California, some 200 or 300 miles from the terminus of any railroad, and contains 3,600 acres of land, 640 of which is timber land. If the property is sold it would bring substantially nothing.

They belong to the Now, these Indians are not self-sustaining. Pi-Ute or Modoc tribe, and are roaming throughout the country we never having been able to hold them on any reservation up to this time.

This matter affects three States-Nevada, Oregon, and Califor-This matter affects three States—Nevada, Oregon, and California—and it is urgently requested by the citizens of that section of the country and urgently presented to the House by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. This land is valueless unless it can be put to some such purpose as this. Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Permit me to ask if the gentleman has in his possession this request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior; or are they embodied in the report?

Mr. BARHAM. Oh, yes; they are published in the report.
Mr. PICKLER. Has the gentleman the letter of the Department bearing upon this question?

ment bearing upon this question?

Mr. BARHAM. Oh, yes; it is in the report.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I would like to have the report read, if the gentleman will permit it.

Mr. BARHAM. Certainly. I think if the report is read it will satisfy everybody in reference to the matter. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. Stephenson) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 152) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use Fort Bid-

After careful consideration of this resolution, your committee would recommend the following amendments:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,

Washington, April 2, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 6th ultimo, in which you refer to the desire of this office to establish an Indian training school upon the abandoned military reservation at Fort Bidwell, Cal., for the Indians of that vicinity, who are entirely without school facilities and in great need thereof, and state that you have examined the law on the question of whether or not this Department can use the same for the desired purposes, and are of the opinion that further action of Congress will be necessary therefor; that you intend to do all you can to have established at the said abandoned post a Government training school as above indicated, and would therefore ask that this office give the matter careful consideration and report thereon for the consideration of Congress.

In reply you are informed that under date of March 5, 1896, this office made inquiry of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the present status of the said reservation—asking what, if any, improvements or buildings had been sold or otherwise disposed of, and whether or not there was any way in which the said buildings and lands could be used for Government Indian school purposes above indicated.

I am now in receipt of the desired information from the General Land Office, being a report from the Assistant Commissioner of that office, dated March 28, 1896, which reads as follows:

"In reply I have to state that the Fort Bidwell Post Reservation was established by Executive order of October 19, 1866; enlarged and connected with the public survey October 4, 1870. The estimated area is 3,678.19 acres. A wood reservation was relinquished and placed under the control of the Interior Department for disposal under the act of July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 108). The remainder of the reservation was relinq

"After the transfer of that portion in section 8, it was reported to this office that there were six structures thereon," presumed to be private property, but on November 17, 1893, the War Department transmitted to this office a schedule showing that there are forty buildings on the reservation; that their condition is good, and their value $13,575, exclusive of fences, waterworks, sewerage, etc.

"This office has not yet had occasion to make further inquiry in regard to the ownership of the buildings, but presumes that they belong to the Government.

This office has not yet had occasion to make further inquiry in regard to the ownership of the buildings, but presumes that they belong to the Government.

"No steps have yet been taken looking to the disposal either of the land or buildings, but the general appraiser of abandoned military reservations, now in New Mexico, will probably reach California in the near future, when the buildings on this reservation, and so much of the land as is surveyed, will be appraised with a view to the disposal thereof under the said act of July 5, 1884, unless other disposition thereof is authorized.

"This office knows of no reason why action should not be postponed by the Secretary to allow time for legislative action with a view to the establishment of the desired reservation, provided such action is deemed necessary."

Further, in this connection, this office is in receipt of H. Res. 152, being the joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by you under date of March 27, 1896, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use Fort Bidwell for an Indian training school. This joint resolution meets the hearty approval of this office, and I have therefore this day reported upon the matter to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, so stating, and recommending that Congress be urged to give the same favorable action.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. J. A. BARHAM, House of Representatives.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to know whether there is any information in possession of the committee as to the number of children to be educated. Have not they an Indian school there

Mr. LACEY. They have not.
Mr. PICKLER. If there was any necessity for this matter—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question with his permission—that is, whether the bill in any way changes the title of this property?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. It is now in the United States, and the control is in the Secretary of the Interior. There is no change in the title.

Mr. RICHARDSON. None at all?

Mr. LACEY. None whatever. I ask a vote upon the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed.

and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONFIRMATION OF CASH ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8413) to confirm certain cash entries of public lands. Its number is 167 on the House Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all entries of the public lands made under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to graduate and reduce the price of the public lands to actual settlers and cultivators," approved August 4, 1854, which are illegal and invalid because of the fact that the lands covered thereby had never been offered for sale, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, if, upon examination by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the same are found to be otherwise regular and in compliance with said act and the acts supplemental thereto.

Sec. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the point of order against the calling up of this bill in this hour. It seems to be obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. LACEY. I hope my friend will not press the point of order until he hears an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The point of order is reserved.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. McRAE], who will explain the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point of order which I desire to reserve is that the bill should be on the Union Calendar, instead of on the House Calendar.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is stated in

Under the graduation act of 1854, which provided for a reduction in the price of public lands to those who actually cultivated and settled upon them, these lands were entered; but the payand settled upon them, these lands were entered; but the payments in some cases were not made technically in accordance with the statute. A few entries were permitted. Those of you who are familiar with the graduation act will remember that the price was graduated according to the length of time between the date of the public offering and the entry. In that way some confusion arose. The purpose of this bill is to quiet the title to a number of public land entries that are now in the hands of actual settlers, which lands have been paid for and occupied, and transferred a number of times. Unless they are passed to patent there will be confusion, trouble, and litigation.

That is the whole purpose of the bill, and I hope there will be no delay about it. The land officers ask for it, and the committee think the bill should pass.

think the bill should pass.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the point of order, so far as

A am concerned.

Mr. LACEY. I will add to what my colleague has stated that this bill will apply only to some lands in Arkansas. The draft of the bill was made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in order to enable him to adjust these particular titles.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the bill state that?
Mr. LACEY. The bill is general in its character, but the actual application of it will reach only the lands to which I have referred.
The Commissioner says:

This will include the entries made in Arkansas south of the old Louisiana boundary line and north of the new one authorized by act of May 19, 1828 (4 Stat. L., 276).

Only a small region of country will be affected by this bill. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION AGAINST FOREST FIRES.

Mr. LACEY. I next call up the bill (H. R. 9124) to protect the forests on the public domain from destruction by fire. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be surveyed or plainly marked ways, about 1,000 feet in width, through the forests on the public domain which are liable to destruction by fire, at intervals of from 5 to 10 miles apart, in such directions as, when cleared, may be deemed most effective to prevent the spreading of fire.

Sec. 2. That the timber contained in such ways may be offered for sale at public auction in parcels, with the condition that the purchaser shall clear the entire width of that part of the way the timber on which is purchased by him. As to those parts of the ways which can not be so cleared bids may be asked for the clearing of the same in parcels and as many of the same accepted as may be deemed expedient.

Sec. 3. That such purchaser or contractor shall enter into contract to perform the work as required in the specifications for his bid, and shall give bond for the faithful performance of his contract in such sum as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior or by any person designated by him.

Mr. LACEV I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, the forest fires which occur in the Western country are a source of great danger. The forests become ignited, and the fire sweeps for miles and miles, often destroying as much as a hundred square miles of timber, and the loss to the Government and to the inhabitants who live in the country is very great. There is no perfect way of stopping these fires without great expense to the Government, which of course can not be contemplated at the present time. The bill which I originally drew went a great deal further than the bill which is now before the House. I wanted an express mandate to the Secretary of the Interior to cause these ways to be cut, but the committee thought that it was not wise to require that at present. The cutting of these ways for the purpose of stopping fire is somewhat experimental, and for that reason the committee thought that the bill should be modified so as to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to determine when and where these ways should be cleared. become ignited, and the fire sweeps for miles and miles, often these ways should be cleared.

I know of no way by which the spread of these fires can be I know of no way by which the spread of these fires can be stopped except by clearing these ways. At present when a fire occurs the inhabitants who live in the vicinity gather together and try to concentrate upon one point and cut the timber down to stop the fire. They seldom succeed in doing it. They can not cut enough timber. The ways which they cut are too narrow, and consequently the fire keeps on until it reaches a barren place, or until there is a change in the wind. If the wind changes, then they can fight the fire, or if it comes to a barren place it will, of course, die out. If these ways are cut at intervals of 5 or 10 miles, we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that the fire will not burn beyond those points. At least the inhabitants in that part of the country can concentrate their efforts there and make a successful fight against the further spread of the fire. Inasmuch a successful fight against the further spread of the fire. Inasmuch a successful fight against the further spread of the fire. Inasmuch as this bill does not involve any appropriation, inasmuch as its execution is clearly discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior, inasmuch as it is contemplated that these ways that are to be cut will pay for their own clearing, I can see no objection to the passage of the bill. The timber is worth as much as the cost of clearing. The bill provides that the timber may be offered for sale at public auction, with the condition that the purchaser shall clear the entire width of the way.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. I did not have the good fortune to be able to Mr. HERMANN. I did not have the good fortune to be able to hear the reading of the bill, and therefore I will trouble my friend to answer a question. As I understand it, no expense is entailed upon the Government of the United States in the cutting of these

Mr. SHAFROTH. No: not under the present bill. In a former bill I desired that, but it is not the provision of this bill.
Mr. HERMANN. Is there any maximum limit as to the width of these ways?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are to be about 1,000 feet in width. I did not think that was wide enough; still the committee thought they would limit it to that.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask my friend if he does not think that Mr. HERMANN. I will ask my friend if he does not think that the privileges given are apt to be abused by timber-land speculators, who will petition the Department of the Interior for the privilege of cutting the ways, representing the dangers from fire, with the sole view of advancing their own personal interests, so that by the cutting of the ways they will be able to obtain timber which, under the forestry act and the restrictions at present imposed, they are not now able to obtain?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think it would be abused, because a thousand feet in width of timber is not sufficient to be any great object to a speculator. It is true that all laws are subject to a buse.

object to a speculator. It is true that all laws are subject to abuse; but when discretion is vested in the Secretary of the Interior, he is evidently not going to act upon that matter without informa-he is evidently not going to act upon that matter without information from some persons residing in that locality, and perhaps from the report of a special agent.

Mr. HERMANN. My friend knows how extensive the forest reservations are. For instance, in my own State a forest reservation extends from the waters of the Columbia River on the north to the northern boundary of California on the south, being 264 miles long and embracing an area of 5,000,000 acres. Now, my friend will observe that if these ways are to be useful at all in the way of preventing the spread of fire it would be necessary to cut such ways all over this extensive reservation—to cut ways at such ways all over this extensive reservation-to cut ways at different places—which would entail not only a great deal of expense to the people, but also enable certain persons interested in the pur-chase of lumber to obtain a vast amount of timber in the cutting chase of lumber to obtain a vast amount of timber in the cutting of that magnificent forest reservation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The only answer I can give is to say that that little cutting would be infinitesimal when compared to the damage done by one fire. I do not know how it is in your part of the country, but in our part, if a fire is ignited, where there are no barriers to prevent its spread, it will cover as much as a hundred square miles, and the result is that the growth perhaps of centuries is totally destroyed in two or three days. There is no way now of stopping these fires, and there ought to be some way to check them. One fire in my State last summer covered a great many square miles. The loss of timber on that occasion was enormous and of no benefit to anyone. I think if there were ways cleared of a thousand feet in width at intervals of 5 or 10 miles the fire could be stopped at those places.

Mr. HERMANN. But I will ask my friend if he realizes this difficulty? Take the instance of the forest reservation to which I have referred in my State, 264 miles north and south. At what have referred if my state, 204 lines north and south. At what point in that reservation would he commence cutting ways, and how many ways would he cut in that immense area?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, I should like to see them cut every 10 miles. At the same time I doubt very much whether the Secretary of the Interior would sanction that. Perhaps not. I would like to see it every 5 miles. What is a thousand feet at every 5 miles? A thousand feet would only be a fifth of a mile; and the result would be that you would save 5 miles of solid timber.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not most likely that the fire would jump a thousand feet?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I doubt in my mind whether a thousand feet is wide enough. The criticism of this bill in my State is that a thousand feet is not sufficient; that these fires are so hot that they will ignite and leap areas of even a greater width than a thousand feet. But while the limit is fixed at that, it may be more. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary. It has been put at about a thousand feet by the committee, but if he thinks that too narrow a width he is vested with power to have it made some wider.

Mr. HERMANN. Of course my friend from Colorado must concede that if the cutting of one way of a thousand feet wide would be necessary, he would have to follow it up by the cutting of other ways, because if one way was necessary to prevent the spread of a fire, other ways also should be cleared.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course that is true where the timber is pine and a large, compact body of it exists. The timber lands in these United States are in different conditions. Take the timber in these United States are in different conditions. Take the timber in my State, for instance, and with a fire starting in the pine it will spread with terrific speed, and will hardly have any limit in its extent. Now, in other parts of the United States where the timber is other than pine, it is not so. I do not know how it is in your country, whether it would continue or not; but in my State a way of 1,000 feet in width is not unreasonable.

Mr. HERMANN. Of course my friend will concede that under the restrictions imposed it is almost impossible for a person to enter these forest reservations and cut timber for a sperson to enter these forest reservations and cut timber for a speculative purpose; but do you not think that this will be a very great in-ducement on the part of timber speculators really to represent the necessity for the cutting of these ways for the preservation of the forests, and that they will seek authority to cut these ways, whereas in reality it is their personal interests that prompt them to ask to here the ways cut?

have the ways cut? Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. SHAFROTH. I think not; because I do not think that timber upon a thousand feet in width would be a sufficient inducement for speculators to go in.

Mr. HERMANN. You also know this, that even in cutting timber there is a great deal of waste matter in the small material piled on the ground, and this forms a bed in which fire ignites, and that unless that débris is carefully carried off from the area cut it will add an additional danger to those which now exist.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is provided by this bill the contractors shall absolutely clear the way, which means that they shall take all the timber and débris off.

Mr. HERMANN. Well, sir, I think when you come to look for the successful operation of your bill you will find that it is utterly impossible to accomplish the purposes contemplated. Mr. SHAFROTH. The whole matter is left to the discretion of

Mr. SHAFROTH. The whole matter is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and it seems to me that it can do no

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know that I have any objection to the ill. It seems to me as it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior that no damage will occur from it. Why does the gentleman say it will not cost anything?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I mean to say this: That the timber on these ways which it is proposed to clear often is of sufficient value to justify their being cleared.

Mr. PICKLER. How do you know that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I admit that in a good many instances it may not be valuable.

Mr. PICKLER. The Secretary of the Interior will be empowered to go ahead at his discretion?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; but there is no appropriation made; and even if it is necessary that the Government should spend some money to clear these ways, in order to save miles and the control of the con miles of timber, it seems to me the Government ought to do it. But the Secretary of the Interior can not proceed in the absence of an appropriation.

Mr. PICKLER. When this timber has been cut off, what is going to grow up there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, there may be a small growth of pines in the course of years. But at the same time these cleared places will afford rallying points to which the settlers in the community can go with whatever means may be at their command for stopping these fires. If there is a growth of low brush they can easily cut that off while the fire approaches. There is no other way, so far as I can conceive (and I have studied this question), of stopping these fires. If Congress wants to provide for patrolling the forests, if you want to send an army out there with authority to extinguish the fires, of course that would be more acceptable to us. But that would cost the Government too much money. It seems to me that the provision embraced in this bill for clearing these rights of way in the manner described is the most effective and inexpensive mode of stopping these fires

Mr. PICKLER. If, after these places are cleared, the grass should grow up thickly, and then the brush and the undergrowth, it seems to me there would be great difficulty in stopping a fire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is true that there might be some difficulty. Still these cleared places, as I have said, would afford to the people living in that region a rallying point, where they would not have to cut the timber in order to prevent the progress would not have to cut the timber in order to prevent the progress of the fire. At present, when they are trying to stop a fire, their efforts are foiled by the fact that when, as the fire is approaching, they undertake to fell the timber, the fire is upon them by the time they have cut only a few trees. The result is that frequently miles and miles of timber are destroyed.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill practically empowers the Secretary of the Interior to cut up the whole public domain into checker boards. He may make these clearings every 5 miles, if he chooses.

Mr. SHAFROTH. He may if he wishes, provided he has the money to do it. But this bill involves no appropriation at the present time.

Mr. PICKLER. The Secretary of the Interior will be authorized to proceed with this work, whether the settlers desire it or not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; but it is not supposed the Secretary of the Interior would do anything contrary to the best interests of the Government. It seems to me we must vest this power We can not pass a law providing absolutely for cutsomewhere. somewhere. We can not pass a law providing absolutely for cutting ways in all places, because in a particular locality the work may not be needed. Some States may require something of this kind; others may not. Discretion must be vested in somebody. I know of no one in whom this discretion can more properly be vested than in the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PICKLER. The probability is that some settlers would want this done and some would not, so that serious controversy might arise

might arise.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If that occurs, the Secretary of the Interior can very well determine the matter. He is not going to do anything, it seems to me, contrary to the interests of the greatest number of the settlers. Besides, I do not think the settlers will be divided in sentiment upon a question of this kind. They are unanimous in regard to the necessity of stopping these fires.

Mr. PICKLER. Why would it not be a good idea to provide that this work shall not be done unless the legislature of the State concerned agrees to it?

concerned agrees to it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The legislature of the State would, it is true, be interested to a certain extent in preserving the forests. But these forests belong to the United States. It seems to me it ought not to be left in the power of a State legislature to say whether not to be left in the power of a State legislature to say whether our forests should be preserved or not. On similar ground it might be said, why not prohibit the cutting of timber, provided the State legislature says it should not be done? That would not do. These forests belong to the United States Government, and they should not be put under the control of any other authority.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, it seems to me the people living in a State might well be consulted as to whether they wanted this thing to be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Their wishes will no doubt be consulted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PICKLER. That was my notion; that the legislature might be consulted, and if they agreed to the proposition the Secretary of the Interior might be consulted. of the Interior might go ahead.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me we ought not to make our legislation dependent upon the pleasure of the legislature of any

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask the gentleman who will reap the immediate benefit of this transaction? Of course, it is claimed that the people of the United States will receive the ultimate ben-But aside from the ultimate benefit to the people of the United States from the preservation of the forests, who will be immediately benefited, so far as concerns this timber which is to be cut?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In my section of the country the principal object in preserving the forests is not the timber at all. The object is that there shall be shade made on the mountains so that the snows which fall there will not melt until midsummer, when the water is needed on the plains below for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman misunderstands my question. In plain terms, I want to know who is to get this timber which is to be cut off in clearing these rights of way?

Mr. SHAFROTH. According to the provisions of the bill the Secretary of the Interior, if he desires to have a way cut through the public timber land, say 1,000 feet wide, advertises for bids for the timber to be cut with the condition that the party cutting it shall take it away and clear up the entire width of 1,000 feet free from inflammable matter. Then if there is bid, say, $100 for the timber or any other amount, and the bid is accepted by the Secretary, the money goes into the Treasury of the United States. There can not, it seems to me, be any speculation or any frauds perpetrated under this law, nor will it be in the interest of any of the large corporations in the country.

Mr. HERMANN. Except—I call my friend's attention to this, for he means well and desires honestly to do whatever is possible to preserve the forest reservations, as all of us do, but he will discover, I think, after a careful examination of this matter, that the cover, I think, after a careful examination of this matter, that the cutting of this timber will necessitate the leaving on the ground, in the track of the cutting, of an immense amount of small waste, such as broken branches, twigs, and material of that kind; and the cutting will lead to this condition of affairs, that the grass growing up among this waste matter and dying, being left amongst the trees, will be a source of greater danger and lead to more numerous fires and more dangerous fires than we have to confront now.

Mr. SHAFROTH, My friend is mistaken in that. The con-Mr. SHAFROTH. My friend is mistaken in that. The contractors for this work will be required to clear away all of the débris, and the Secretary is vested by the bill with authority to prescribe what shall be done, how the ways shall be cleared, and to provide that no inflammable material shall be left on the ground.

Mr. PICKLER. It will take a large number of agents to watch that proceeding, will it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not at all; it will not require any agents.

They can have an inspection after the work is done. And I will state to my friend that whoever does this cutting is required to give bond to comply with the conditions imposed by the Secretary, and he will be responsible on the bond for the character of the work that is done and the satisfactory nature of the work.

Mr. BLUE. Will the gentleman from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. BLUE. If I understand you correctly you propose to save

Mr. BLUE. If I understand you correctly, you propose to save the Treasury of the United States the expense of clearing these ways through the timber by donating the timber standing upon ways through the timber by donating the timber standing upon the land for that purpose?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; the Secretary of the Interior asks for bids for the clearing of, we will say, a width of 1,000 feet, and for whatever number of miles he wants to go. Bids are received at so much for the timber, with the requirement that the party whose bid is received shall clear up the entire 1,000 feet and at whose bid is received shall clear up the entire 1,000 feet and at the same time clear away the undergrowth and all inflammable material in that distance. That amount goes into the Treasury of the United States and the Government is saved the expense of cutting this way itself. At the same time the person whose bid is accepted gives a bond for the faithful carrying out of the contract; and if he does not perform the conditions he is liable on the bond. In other words, he is required to comply strictly with the regula-tions which the Secretary of the Interior may see proper to impose.

Mr. BLUE. Does it not amount to this, that there will be no such thing as cutting a protection line through the timber lands unless the timber to be cut is of sufficient value to pay for the work?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is quite likely, of course, that such will be the case. The bill, I confess, does not go as far as I desired it to the case. The bill, I confess, does not go as far as I desired it to go. I would like it to have gone very much further. The original bill which I drew provided that the Government should do the work. I wanted the Government to do it whether it paid or not; but I was overruled by the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. It seems to me that under the operation of this bill authority would be given to do it anyway.

Mr. PICKLER of the work of the provided of the provided

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; there is no appropriation provided in the bill.

Mr. BLUE. Is this a provision for the appropriation of the timber cut off the land for the purpose of affording fire protection? Mr. SHAFROTH. For the purpose of affording fire protection,

Mr. GARDNER. Does not the bill assume that the soil will be

Mr. SHAFROTH. Our country is arid, as the gentleman knows, entirely different from what it is in the eastern parts of the country, where high grasses grow. It will doubtless remain sterile until the low pine trees begin to spring up again, which takes a considerable time.

Mr. GARDNER. But will not the fire run through the young pine trees as rapidly—trees that are two or three years old—as when they are more matured or of larger growth?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The young pines will not get started for five it will be much easier to cut away and clear out the small brush and stop the fire than to cut a way through a forest of heavy imber.

Mr. PICKLER. This would not authorize, I suppose, any cutting away of the public forests in the parks?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know whether it would or not. It applies to timber on the public domain.

Mr. LACEY. But not in the parks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; I suppose not in the parks.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I would like to know about that beyond doubt because we certainly do not want to go to devestating. doubt, because we certainly do not want to go to devastating Yellowstone Park or the other national parks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. This applies to timber on the public domain which is liable to destruction by fire. That is the language of the bill, and I do not see very well how it could be further limited.

Mr. PAYNE. That includes all the timber reservations, does it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it includes the timber reservations.
Mr. PAYNE. Then does not the bill authorize the Secretary of the Interior to throw open to market 8 per cent of all the of the Interior to throw open to market 8 per cent of all the reserved timber in the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think not.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not? The Secretary can cut a swath a thousand feet wide each way in every 5 miles. That would be two twenty-fifths of all the timber, or 8 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The proposed width is only about one-fifth of a mile

Mr. PAYNE. He can cut a swath a thousand feet wide in one direction, which would be one twenty-fifth, and then he can cut, in a direction perpendicular to that, at the required distance, another swath a thousand feet wide, making another twenty-fifth, or altogether 8 per cent of the whole; and the power to do that is left by this bill in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. He can, in his discretion, sell that proportion of the reserved timber

Mr. CONNOLLY. Or he can give it away for the sake of get-ting it cut off.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the first place, gentlemen should understand that the timber that is destroyed by cutting is infinitesimally small in amount compared with that which is destroyed by fire. You will find that every year, in the United States, there is ten times as much timber destroyed by fire as by cutting.

Mr. PAYNE. No; because that would be 80 per cent of all the timber in the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not talking about the provisions of this bill now. I am merely saying that there is fully ten times as much timber destroyed by fire now in a year as there is destroyed by cutting.

Mr. STEPHENSON. And what causes those bush fires?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Travelers and hunters, for the most part, building fires and not putting them out properly.

Mr. STEPHENSON. They are caused largely by some of the timber being cut down and the refuse part being left to dry and thus facilitate the spread of the fire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not the usual cause in our part of Mr. SHAFROTH. That is not the usual cause in our part of the country. Forest fires are caused generally by campers or hunters. A camper or a hunter builds a fire and does not extinguish it properly, and the wind comes along and fans it into a flame and it spreads and destroys the timber.

Mr. STEPHENSON. But if you cut down a portion of the timber and leave the brush and chips there to dry, will not that give the wind a better opportunity to spread the fire?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. You will find that there is more of an undergrowth with the timber itself than there would be in these clearings. At least that is the case in our part of the country.

clearings. At least that is the case in our part of the country. At all events, one thing is certain; the Secretary of the Interior has as much interest in the preservation of the public forests of this country as we have, and this bill is merely intended to give him discretionary power to have these clearings made if he thinks it desirable.

Mr. LEIGHTY. Does this bill provide an absolute means of preventing forest fires?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not; and no bill can be framed that will do that

Mr. LEIGHTY. No; I think not. Does this bill provide any way of keeping these openings clear after they are once made?
Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not. That would involve too large an expenditure

Mr. LEIGHTY. Then, does not the gentleman believe that in a few years these clearings will be grown up worse than the timber

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not in our part of the country. However, as I have said, the bill vests the discretion in the Secretary of the Interior to decide where these ways shall be cut and where they or six years; and even in the event of a fire in this younger timber | shall not, and if he does not think it desirable in any particular locality he will not have them cut. In fact, the criticism of the bill I find is that it leaves it uncertain whether the Secretary will authorize any of these ways to be cut. I want them cut in my part of the country, because I know that we lose and the Government loses every year vast quantities of timber that would be preserved for useful purposes if these ways were cleared.

Mr. TRACEY. Has there been any estimate made of the cost of making these openings?

of making these openings?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not that I know of. In some parts of the country it would not pay to make them at all, but in those cases the Secretary of the Interior would doubtless refuse to authorize them. In other localities it would pay, and there he would give the authorization.

Mr. PICKLER. I will ask the gentleman whether the Secretary of the Interior indorses this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Secretary of the Interior disapproved of the other bill which I drew because it required him to do this work, and required a large expenditure of money on the part of the Government, an expenditure which I thought wise, but which he regarded as too great. For that reason the Committee on Public Lands thought they would modify the bill so as to leave it discretionary with the Secretary to authorize these ways to be cleared wherever it seemed to him desirable.

Mr. PICKLER. Have any of the forestry associations that are looking specifically after the forests of the country ever expressed looking specifically after the forests of the country ever expressed any opinion as to this measure?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. When I was first elected to Congress I invited some parties to devise a method to prevent these forest fires. I wrote to the State engineer of the State of Colorado and sent him a rough draft of a bill for that purpose and asked what he thought about it. His criticism was that the "ways" proposed would not be wide enough; that the fires were so intense that they might leap across a thousand feet; that if the ways were to be of great value as a protection they ought to be made wider.

Mr. TRACEY. To what extent are the forests devastated by these fires?

these fires?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, to a fearful extent. Miles and miles of Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, to a fearful extent. Miles and miles of timber are destroyed.

Mr. TRACEY. Are the trees absolutely destroyed?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The trees are absolutely destroyed.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, an investigation of this question has led me to think that there are not many regions in the United States where the methods proposed by this bill would be found either desirable or applicable. I am quite sure that in the low-lands, where, when the timber is cut down, the brush grows up rapidly, the result would be that the new growth of brush would carry the fire more effectively than the old standing timber would, or at least as effectively, so that the cutting of "ways" of this kind would utterly fail to accomplish the object in view. But inasmuch as the bill left the matter optional with the Secretary of the Interior, and as we were assured that in the high regions, where there are large tracts of timber that have been preserved partly as a protection for the snow, in which the undergrowth comes up very slowly, these methods of protection would be effective, we thought it would be safe to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary to apply them in those regions and in all localities where, in his judg-slowly, these methods of protection would be effective, we thought it would be safe to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary to apply them in those regions and in all localities where, in his judgment, they would be applicable.

As the bill was drawn in that way, the committee thought it wise to give an opportunity for the trial of the experiment in the high mountain regions, where, they were assured, the proposed method would be efficacious, although, of course, there is no limitation in the bill as to locality. The Department of the Interior has embarked on the work of saving all the forests that can be saved in the future. The subject has become almost a hobby with the Department, and I am glad that it is so. With this discretion lodged in the Secretary of the Interior, in view of the present attitude of the Department toward the general subject and the growth of public sentiment in favor of the preservation of the forests, the passage of this bill will, I believe, be entirely safe. The method which the bill contemplates would perhaps be effectual in some localities in California, in Montana, in Idaho, and in Colorado, but I do not believe that it would be so in the lower lands, or in the heavy timber of Oregon. Certainly it would not do in Michigan, or Minnesota, or Wisconsin, where the new growth would soon spring up and carry the fire quite as rapidly as the original timber would, or even more rapidly.

Mr. HULICK. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is rather indefinite when it requires that "the purchaser shall clear the entire width of that part of the way the timber on which is purchased by him." Does that include clearing it of brush, or would the purchaser or the men employed to do this clearing be allowed to simply take the timber out and leave the underbrush on the ground?

allowed to simply take the timber out and leave the underbrush on the ground?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If they did only that, the way would not be cleared.

Mr. HULICK. But the terms of the bill seem to imply merely that the purchaser shall take away the timber. Now, does that include taking away the underbrush?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it does. The bill provides further, however, that the work shall be done under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and he can make such specific rules and regulations as may be necessary. I do not think it is wise to attempt to set forth definitely in detail in a bill of this character exactly what shall be done in the way of clearing

Mr. HULICK. It occurs to me that it ought to expressly pro-yide not only for the removal of the timber, but of all under-brush, so that all waste material there should be removed. Mr. SHAFROTH. That is unquestionably meant. Mr. HULICK. The language of the bill is:

The timber on which is purchased by him.

I think it ought to be more definite.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It says:

Shall clear the entire width of that part of the way the timber on which is purchased by him.

It seems to me it means that. And when you take into consideration that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the rules under which this shall be done, the Government is amply protected.
Mr. HULICK.

Mr. HULICK. Another question. Would this timber and brush be removed entirely from this way, or would it be burned on the ground?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Secretary can prescribe either method.

whichever he desires.

Mr. HULICK. It might make a difference. If the timber and Mr. HULICK. It might make a difference. If the timber and underbrush is burned on the ground, why then the land grows up to weeds and underbrush that are really more dangerous in causing the spread of fire than the original timber would be.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Secretary of the Interior would unquestionably be empowered to prescribe in his specifications for bids exactly what he thought was to the interest of the Govern-

Mr. PICKLER. You ought to exclude public parks. You ought not to go into the Yellowstone and cut any such ways through the timber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Secretary of the Interior would not do any such thing as that unless it were for the public good.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on the bill, if no further discussion is desired.

RESERVOIR SITES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 264) providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person, live-stock company, or transportation corporation engaged in breeding, grazing, driving, or transporting live stock may construct reservoirs upon unoccupied public lands of the United States, not mineral or otherwise reserved, for the purpose of furnishing water to such live stock, and shall have control of such reservoir, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the lands upon which the same is constructed, not exceeding 160 acres, so long as such reservoir is maintained and water kept therein for such purposes: Provided, That such reservoir shall not be fenced and shall be open to the free use of any person desiring to water animals of any kind.

Sec. 2. That any person, live-stock company, or corporation desiring to avail themselves of the provisions of this act shall file a declaratory statement in the United States land office in the district where the land is situated, which statement shall describe the land where such reservoir is to be or has been constructed; shall state what business such corporation is engaged in; specify the capacity of the reservoir in gallons, and whether such company, person, or corporation has filed upon other reservoir sites within the same county; and if so, how many.

Sec. 3. That at any time after the completion of such reservoir or reservoirs which, if not completed at the date of the passage of this act, shall be constructed and completed within two years after filing such declaratory statement, such person, company, or corporation shall have the same accurately surveyed, as hereinafter provided, and shall file in the United States land office in the district in which such reservoir is located a map or plat showing the location of such reservoir, which map or plat shall be transmitted by the register and receiver of said United States land office to the Secretary of the Interior and approved by him, and thereafter such land shall be reserved from sale by the Secretary of the Int

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drafted in order to aid the men engaged in the raising of stock on the high lands of the Northwest, in localities where water is scarce. In a few inthe Northwest, in localities where water is scarce. In a few instances the cattle men have constructed reservoirs, and they propose to construct others. The difficulty, however, is that after they have constructed the reservoirs and built the necessary dams the land is subject to homestead entry or to settlement by private individuals, thus taking away from the persons who have constructed the reservoirs the advantages which they sought to obtain by their construction in the first place. This bill provides that such reservoirs as may be constructed, and such as have hitherto been constructed, shall be preserved, but that they shall be open to public use, that the parties who have constructed them shall not fence off settlers and other stock raisers from their use. The report of the committee presents the following statement:

These reservoirs are constructed on Government lands, and the corporations are apprehensive that after they have constructed them, at a large expense, some irresponsible party, with the object of securing the improvements thus made, may file upon the quarter section of lands upon which the reservoirs are located, and deprive the companies of their property and access to the reservoirs.

It is not intended to give title to the land upon which the reservoirs are located, and the companies can only have control of such reservoirs under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and only for such time as such reservoirs are maintained and water kept therein. The act also provides that the land shall not be fenced and shall be open to the free use of any person desiring to water animals of any kind.

This is a Senate bill, and the amendments which were adopted in the Senate make the bill entirely safe, in the judgment of the committee. The bill provides that reservoirs shall not be located upon public land reserved for other purposes. This will prevent any of the general reservoirs that have been selected by the Geological Survey for irrigation purposes from being used for the pur-poses contemplated by this bill. They are also limited to 160 acres of land, so that it will only apply to these temporary watering places for cattle grazing upon the plains or being driven from point to point upon the plains.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF SETTLEMENT RIGHTS IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 4142) to protect settlement rights where two or more persons settle upon the same subdivision of agricultural public lands before survey thereof. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this ought to be upon the House Calendar, but by mistake it has been placed upon the Union Calendar. I ask that it be considered at this time as upon the House Calendar, because it properly belongs

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where settlements have heretofore been or may hereafter be made upon agricultural public lands of the United States prior to the survey thereof, and it has been or shall be ascertained, after the public surveys have been extended over such lands, that two or more settlers have improvements upon the same legal subdivision, it shall be lawful for such settlers to make joint cash entry of their lands at the local land office, or for either of said settlers to enter into contract with his cosettlers to convey to them their portion of said land after patent is issued to him, and after making said contract to make homestead entry in his own name, and prove up and pay for said land; and proof of joint occupation by himself and others, and of such contract with them made, shall be equivalent to proof of sale, occupation, and homestead entry by the applicant: Provided, That in no case shall the amount patented under this act exceed 160 acres; nor shall this act apply to lands not subject to homestead entry; nor shall anything in this section contained defeat or impair any valid right accrued or to accrue in pursuance of contests or other proceedings initiated prior to the passage of this act, but such rights shall be heard and determined in the same manner and be subject to the same terms and conditions as if this act had not been passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be considered as on the House Calendar.

as on the House Calendar.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. This bill was passed in substantially this form in the House in the Fifty-second Congress. The matter was referred to the Commissioner of the Land Office, Mr. Carter, now a Senator from Montana. The bill was recommended. It passed the House, but did not go to the Senate. It provides for a condition that does not often arise, but which, when it does arise, sometimes necessitates the passage of private bills. It refers to cases where two settlers happen to get upon the same quarter, each of them claiming a homestead. It provides that they may jointly enter the land, and for an equitable division between them of the rights in that particular site. Such a condition arises only occasionally, but it seemed best to provide for it when it did arise. Settlements but it seemed best to provide for it when it did arise. Settlements are often made upon unsurveyed lands, and the subsequent survey sometimes puts two homesteaders upon the same tract.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a good bill. I have known several difficulties to occur in the settlement on public lands in my State in cases of this character. I would like to inquire how it would affect a case of this kind: Suppose there is a valuable 160 acres of public land and two men agree to go on it and improve it and build their houses. Is there anything to pre-vent them from doing so, and then entering up the land at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. LACEY. There would be no objection if it could be done; but it is not the purpose of the bill. In the case indicated two or three persons would forfeit their homestead rights and only get one tract in the operation. It is intended to cover mistakes, and not such cases as the gentleman from South Dakota suggests.

Mr. PICKLER. Would it not be safe to confine it to 40 acres? There are valuable 160-acre tracts, and two men could go on them, and thus secure them for division.

Mr. LACEY. I do not think the bill is drawn broad enough to cover such cases as my friend suggests.

Mr. PICKLER. I think it is a pretty good bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.
Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, that clears the House Calendar of bills from the Committee on Public Lands with the exception of one bill, which is a vetoed bill, and which would require a yea-andnay vote of necessity.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged bill, and can come up at any time. Mr. LACEY. Mr. LACEY. Then I will not call it up at this time. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. LITTLE (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 3500) to authorize the adjustment and settlement of accounts of John Y. Williams

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to adjust and settle the accounts of John Y. Williams, late superintendent of Indian school at Fort Hall and special disbursing agent, on the principles of equity and justice, and to give him credit for such disbursements as shall be shown to have been actually and honestly made and have accrued to the benefit of the Government or the Indians: Provided, That the total credits allowed under the provisions of this act shall not be more than $900 in excess of the balance now standing against this officer.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask that the report be read. Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a bill that belongs to the Union Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE. This does not involve a charge on the Govern-

The SPEAKER. Is this matter to be paid out of some Indian

Mr. LITTLE. No, sir; the bill is to authorize the settlement of the accounts of a gentleman who had charge of the building of the Fort Hall school, and there is some informality in the receipts. The bill only authorizes settlement according to the principles of

The bill only authorizes settlement according to the principles of law and equity.

The SPEAKER. How is the account when adjusted to be paid? Mr. SHERMAN. He is to be given credit on the books. Suit is now pending against this officer for the balance which is due, because some of his accounts have been suspended. This simply authorizes the Department to give him credit on the books of the Treasury Department for expenditures he made when he shall have furnished the prescribed vouchers. It does not provide for any appropriation whatever, but simply authorizes these credits to balance his accounts and do away with the suit that is now pending against him for the balance.

Mr. LITTLE. The report is very clear on the matter, and if that can be read I think that will satisfy gentlemen.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I must make the point of order against it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the report might be read as debate on the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir; I ask that it be read as a part of my

The report (by Mr. Sherman) was read, as follows:

The committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3500) to authorize the adjustment and settlement of accounts of John Y. Williams, submit the following favorable report:

Mr. Williams was superintendent of the Fort Hall school for four years from September, 1889. He found the school in very bad condition, the building very much dilapidated, and necessitating considerable outlay to do any satisfactory work. Williams went into the work earnestly and put things into satisfactory shape, not always with regard to the regulations of the Indian Department. During his administration they had a very severe visitation of scarlet fever, and the school was isolated. Mr. Williams lost his son by the disease, and his own condition became such that he did things carelessly and without due regard to the law and Department regulations. The result was a large amount of suspensions against his accounts, which he tried by several months' labor to remove by substitution of new vouchers to take the place of those suspended. Williams impressed many of those dealing with him in the office with having made an earnest but badly managed effort to build up the Fort Hall school, which school was reported by special agents, who were sent there to investigate, to be in first-rate condition about the time he left.

His accounts have been presented and passed upon by the Indian Bureau. The amount of the account, as thus passed upon, was about $15,000 on the debit and credit side each; the credit side exceeded the debit side as passed by the auditor by about $900, solely because of informality. A suit has been instituted against Williams, and is now pending, to recover this balance. No one claims that Williams did not act in good faith and honestly. The purpose of this bill is to allow the account to be stated, regardless of Williams's neglect to follow Department regulations, so as to credit him with payments made. Commissioner Browning, in response to a request for his op

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a private claim, and if it were up for consideration I would not object. I make no point of order against it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. LITTLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is nothing else, Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FLAGSTAFF (ARIZ.) WATER SYSTEM.

Mr. SCRANTON (when the Committee on the Territories was called). I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8676) to enable the town of Flagstaff, in the Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds to construct a water system.

the town of Flagstaff, in the Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds to construct a water system.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the town of Flagstaff, in the Territory of Arizona, by its mayor and common council, is hereby enabled to issue bonds of the said town, not to exceed $65,000 in amount, payable within thirty years from the date thereof, in lawful money of the United States of America, and to bear interest at not to exceed $69,000 in amount, payable within thirty years from the date thereof, in lawful money of the United States of America, and to bear interest at not to exceed $69,000 in amount, payable within thirty years from the date thereof, in lawful money of the United States of America, and to bear interest at not to exceed $69,000 in amount, interest payable semiannually, the proceeds of the sale of said bonds, which shall not be sold at less than par, to be used exclusively in the construction of a water system for the said town of Flagstaff; that before said bonds are sold at least thirty days' notice shall be given by publication in one or more newspapers of general circulation, asking for bids for the purchase of said bonds at not less than par.

Sec. 2. That at the time said bonds are ready to be issued by the mayor and common council of the sale thereof, shall be kept, shall be required to give an additional bond, to be approved by the mayor and common council of said bonds, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, in his hands, for the safe-keeping of said bonds, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, and to account for the same.

Sec. 3. That before said bonds are issued the mayor and common council of the town of Flagstaff shall cause an election to be held, in all respects as elections are now held in said town for the election of town officers, at which election the qualified electors of said town of Flagstaff, by its mayor and common council, shall not issue said bonds.

The report (by Mr. MURPHY of Arizona) was read, as follows:
The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred House bill 8676, beg leave to submit the following report:
Flagstaff, in northern Arizona, has a population of 2,000 and assessed property valuation of $750,000; tax rate 6 mills, with no indebtedness. The water for the use and protection of the town is hauled by railroad a distance of 50 miles. The business portion of the town has been destroyed by fire four times, and insurance rates are excessive. It has been represented to the satisfaction of the committee that a good and sufficient water system can be constructed for the amount of the bonds authorized in the bill, the water to be piped from a spring in the San Francisco Mountains, affording ample pressure for all purposes, and that a revenue will at once be available after the construction of the works to pay operating expenses and interest and provide a sinking fund for payment of the principal of the bond issue.

The bill appeals to the committee as especially meritorious, and therefore its passage is recommended.

ISSUE OF CERTAIN BONDS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4052, with Senate amendments, on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory.

Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory.

Be it enacted, etc., That the coupon bonds and indebtedness of the Territory of New Mexico, amounting to $75,000, authorized by section 7 of an act of the thirty-first legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act authorizing the rebuilding of the Territorial capitol at Santa Fe, which was destroyed by fire May 12, 1862, and to provide the necessary means therefor and a board with authority to rebuild the same," approved February 5, 1895, and designated as capitol rebuilding bonds of the Territory of New Mexico;

Also, the bonds and indebtedness, amounting to $15,000, authorized by section 1 of an act of the said legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act to provide for the maintenance of the military institute at Roswell, N. Mex.," approved February 13, 1895;

Also, the bonds and indebtedness, amounting to the sum of $30,000, authorized by section 1 of an act of the said legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act to provide an addition to the insane asylum of New Mexico of the accommodation of all the insane persons of the Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 13, 1895; and

Also, the bonds and indebtedness, amounting to the sum of $35,000, authorized by section 1 of an act of the said legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act to provide for the completion of the buildings for the normal schools of New Mexico at Las Vegas and Silver City, and to provide for the necessary furnishings therefor; and for additions to the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Las Cruces," approved February 27, 1895, be, and the same are hereby, approved, confirmed, and made valid: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to make the Government of the United States liable or responsible for the payment of any of said bonds by this act approved, confirmed, and made valid.

Such bonds having been issued in refunding and in lieu of $150,000 of bonds, and the overdue interest thereon, of said county of Santa Fe, theretofore issued and outstanding, are hereby validated, approved, and confirmed."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend that the amendment just read be nonconcurred in.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory, and for other purposes."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SCRANTON. On behalf of the committee, I move the adoption of an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that this is a House amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is.
Mr. RICHARDSON. Have we not just acted on the Senate amendments?
The SPEAKER. We have.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And now there are further amendments proposed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is almost impossible to catch the drift of the action proposed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The question in my mind was whether it was in order for the House committee to propose amendments to the bill after it has come back with Senate amendments. I was inquiring more as to the parliamentary status than with any reference to the merits of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; I do not care to do so.

The SPEAKER. If no point of order is made, the Chair will put the greatien.

put the question.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. The amendment just adopted was, as I under-

Mr. LACEY. The amendment just adopted was, as I understand, an amendment to an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Was the proposition to agree to a Senate amendment with an amendment? If so, the Chair, with the consent of the House, will regard the proceeding just taken as vacated, and the Clerk will read the Senate amendment, together with the proposition to amend that amendment.

Mr. LACEY. The interlined amendment is an amendment to the committee amendment—merely a clerical correction.

The SPEAKER. Then it is not an amendment to a Senate amendment?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. LACEY. Yes; but there is an interlineation to which the attention of the Chair was just called. That interlineation was not in the committee's amendment, but was inserted by way of clerical correction. It is merely a clerical amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not quite sure that he under-

Mr. LACEY. The situation is this: The bill went over to the Senate; the Senate sent it back with amendments; it is now proposed that the House concur in those Senate amendments with amendments. Then the amendment with which it is proposed to amendments. Then the amendment with which it is proposed to concur has a clerical amendment interlined, which was offered by the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. SCRANTON], and the concurrence of the House is asked to that amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman having the bill in charge that he can accomplish his object in a parliamentary way by moving to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and having the matter go to a committee of conference. Then let the conference committee report to the House in favor of the adop-tion of the amendments with the amendment that has been suggested. That, it seems to me, is the only parliamentary way in which the object can be accomplished. This House can not finally adopt the amendment without the consent of the Senate; and that is the way consent should be obtained.

The SPEAKER. The House might concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. But then the bill would have to go back to the Senate; otherwise it would be an attempt to accomplish legislation by the action of one House of Congress. I suggest to the lation by the action of one House of Congress. I suggest to the gentleman that the easiest and the only legitimate way to proceed is to move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and then when the conferees are appointed they can report a proposition that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment which the gentleman now asks the House to adopt. That is the way in which the object should be reached.

Mr. PAYNE. But, Mr. Speaker, if the House should concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment it would not necessarily require a conference in any event, because the Senate might the Senate amendment with an amendment it would not necessarily require a conference in any event, because the Senate might concur in the House amendment, and that would end the matter.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the ordinary way for the two Houses to get together is in the manner I have suggested. One is a parliamentary method of procedure and the other is not. If the gentleman from New York is correct we might drift from one House to the other a dozen times without accomplishing anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that both gentlemen are correct. It is only two different methods of getting at the same thing. If the House desires to send the bill back to the Senate, concurring in their amendment with an amendment, it may do so, or it may nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and let the matter be adjusted in a conference. It is only a question of procedure. be adjusted in a conference. It is only a question of procedure, The Chair would like to know the wishes of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in charge of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if he sends it to the Senate, this being a short ses-of the bill that if he sends it to the Senate, this being a short session, he can control it during the entire time; but if he adopts the plan suggested by the gentleman from New York he necessarily loses control of the matter.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the matter, it is simply a correction of a clerical error, and hardly seems of sufficient importance to require a conference between the two Houses. My idea was to amend the bill, and then of course have it go to the Senate as a matter of form.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman moves to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment which has been reported to the House, and a question will be taken on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to the Senate for the action of that body on the House amendment.

On motion of Mr. SCRANTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REVISED STATUTES RELATING TO THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. SCRANTON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7716) to amend section 1921 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1921 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1921. Upon the convening of the legislature of the Territory of New Mexico any one member of either house may administer the oath of office to the presiding officer-elect, and he shall administer the same to the other members and other officers thereof."

SEC. 2. That the legislative assembly of each Territory may, in addition to the subordinate officers allowed and paid by the United States, employ as additional subordinate officers in each branch thereof one assistant chief clerk, who shall receive a compensation of $5 per day; one assistant enrolling and engrossing clerk, at $4 per day; one assistant sergeant-at-arms and doorkeeper, at $4 per day; one assistant messenger and watchman, at $3 per day; two pages, at $2 per day each; two clerks for committees, one of whom shall be a stenographer, at $5 per day each and one translator and interpreter, at $6 per day; all of which shall be paid out of the Territorial treasury of the respective Territories where the services may be employed.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report, which fully explains this matter.

The report (by Mr. CATRON) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. CATRON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred House bill 7716, submit the following report:

The first section of House bill 7716 is an amendment of section 1921 of the Revised Statutes, which section, in full, is as follows:

"SEC. 1821. The secretary of New Mexico, upon the convening of the legislature thereof, shall administer the oath of office to the members-elect of the two houses, and the officers thereof when chosen; and no other person shall be competent to administer such oath, save in the absence of the secretary, in which case any one member of either house may administer the oath to the presiding officer-elect, and he shall administer the same to the members and other officers."

The object of the bill is to modify the existing law so that the secretary, an appointee of the President, shall not have arbitrary power to organize the legislature, by ignoring the legal certificates of election, as was done at the organization of the last legislature, at which time certificates of election given to members-elect by the county boards of canvassers, as required by law, we ignored, and persons were sworn in on trumped-up certificates or on pretenses in no manner provided by law, so that the political complexion of the legislature was changed in both houses.

It is not believed that any one person should have placed in him the power to nullify the will of the people, as seems to be given by section 1921. The bill under consideration has adopted, as a remedy, the last provision of section 1931, which seems to have been considered by Congress as sufficient in case the secretary failed to be present. The committee can see no reason why this last clause of section 1931 should not be sufficient, as it is incorporated in this bill to organize that legislature under all circumstances, or can they see any reason for retaining in any officer the power given to the qualifications of its members, which is the fundamental principle underlying the organization of all legislative bodies.

The second section is offered to avoid an abuse which has been practiced in some of the legislative assemblies of employing an unreasonable number of employees at the expense of the Territory. Section 1856 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides:

"No law of any Territorial legislature shall be made or enforced by which the governor or secretary of a Territory or the members or officers of any Territorial legislature are paid any compensation other than that provided by the law of the United States."

This section is still in force and has been in force for the last forty years. It has been supposed heretofore that it was sufficient to prohibit any additional employees or officers of the legislature, whether paid by the United States or the Territory, not specifically authorized by the United States or the Territory, not specifically authorized by the United Sta

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SCRANTON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the resolution distributing the President's message.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution for the distribution of the topics in the President's message. I sup-pose there is nothing further that needs to be said in the matter. I move, therefore, that the committee rise and report the resolu-tion back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration a resolution for the distribution of the President's message, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and with the

AFFAIRS IN CUBA

Mr. CULLOM said: Mr. President, a day or two ago I gave notice that this morning, if agreeable to the Senate, I would claim the attention of the body for a little while, and I will do so now, if permitted.

Preparatory to what I have to say, I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it may be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 168) for the extinction of Spanish title and the termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Gulf of Mexico was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the extinction of Spanish title and the termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Gulf of Mexico are necessary to the welfare of those islands and to the people of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the President of the United States, in his annual message, has discussed at some length the vexed situation of affairs in the neighboring Island of Cuba. He has given to the subject much study, and evidently views the existing conditions there with much concern. His most serious consideration, however, is given to the problems which will demand consideration, nowever, is given to the problems which will demand solution in the early future. The magnitude of these problems and of the interests involved require the exercise by our people of their wisdom and best judgment. The decision of the questions arising and to arise, and the determination of the policy to be pursued by this Government in the near days of the future, will command the exhibition of high patriotism, not less than of wise command the exhibition of high patriotism, not less than of wise action, upon our part. We are already placed in such position that some certain course of action must be adopted. Whatever that course may be, it must be such as shall give proper recognition to the rights, under existing conditions, belonging respectively to Spain and to Cuba. It must also recognize the rights and prerogatives of the world at large—of the nations and the people who stand aloof and watch with deepest interest this struggle for independence and for liberty against absolutism. And not the least of the responsibilities imposed upon us as a nation is the conservation of our own rights and interests. In fact, this latter is the determining factor which must control our course.

While I am not disposed to criticise President Cleveland. I may determining factor which must control our course.

While I am not disposed to criticise President Cleveland, I may properly say that I had hoped he would find occasion to give more positive or emphatic expression of the true American continental policy, which ought to be invoked in all cases where the liberty and independence of any of the peoples of the American Continent are involved. And further, I think we ought never to hesitate or delay when the lines of this policy run parallel and coincident with those of common humanity.

If this position shall strike the mind as being too much in advance of the conservatism which has heretofore obtained in all the schools of diplomacy, I may say that that advance is what the world is waiting for. Must the opening of the twentieth century find free America still bound and held by canons dictated for the perpetuation of monarchical power? Under that antiquated conservatism there never would have been erected on the earth the nation which we love and to the establishment of which our fathers consecrated their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

The conservatism which adheres to the precedents born in ancient monasteries and clings to an iron-bound monarchism never cient monasteries and clings to an iron-bound monarchism never built a public schoolhouse nor lived in a free land. Humanity and advancement travel together, and dwell only in the climate of republics.

All the diplomacy of all the ages never found a way by which slavery could be dethroned. It required the humanity of Lincoln savery count be destroned. It required the Bulmanny of Lincoln to break the chains and the progress of the Republic to open the prison walls to liberty and make glad a waiting world.

But to consider the Cuban question and its condition and difficulties I must invite attention to some facts of history in regard to Spain. The peninsula of Spain and Portugal was at the earlito Spain. The peninsula of Spain and Portugal was at the earliest date to which either history or tradition refers peopled by the Iberians and Basques. Celtic tribes afterwards came from the northward, and intermingling with the inhabitants formed a mixed race who remained in Spain, while many of the Celts overran the western Spanish provinces and Portugal, which have retained traces of the Celtic blood to this day. At a later day the Romans by their conquests subjugated the Spanish provinces, two or three centuries before the Christian era. The Roman occupation of course modified greatly the characteristics of the people so long as the Roman Empire retained its domination, which continued amidst various struggles for some five hundred years. The invasion of the Roman Empire and its Gallic provinces by the long as the Roman Empire retained its domination, which continued amidst various struggles for some five hundred years. The invasion of the Roman Empire and its Gallic provinces by the Vandals and northern barbarians, which took place early in the fifth century, was perhaps the most complete saturnalia of wreck and ruin, destruction and carnage, known in history.

The several provinces of the Spanish peninsula were divided up among their barbaric conquerors, who thereupon occupied the land. Then came the Goths and Visigoths, and a Gothic kingdom succeeded and held the country for about three hundred years. During this period many of the Jews who had already settled in various localities were expelled the country. About the beginning of the eighth century, the Gothic kingdom, having materially declined in power, and having become weakened by the growing ascendency of a church and clergy inherited from the Roman period, was deemed fair prey by the Moslems who lived in the north of Africa, across the Straits of Gibraltar. The Moors and Arabs invaded the greater part of Spain, and captured most of the larger cities. In 778, Charlemagne with a great army of Franks crossed the Pyrenees and marched victoriously to the River Ebro, taking possession of the country of the Spanish March.

The whole country now known as Spain and Portugal was the scene of various conquests and revolutions and had its full share of crusades and wars of every sort. Different provinces were created into kingdoms, had their brief careers, and lived or died of crusades and wars of every sort. Different provinces were created into kingdoms, had their brief careers, and lived or died as the fortunes of wars innumerable determined. The Kingdoms of Navarre, of Castile, of Aragon, of Toledo, of Galicia, with Emirates of different boundaries, the principalities of Seville, of old and new Castile, of Granada, of Murcia, of Cordova, and of Catalonia, each had its territory and its sway of much or little power during the troublous period extending to the thirteenth century. A hundred wars and a thousand intrigues militated against peaceful times within the limits of the Spanish Peninsula. Then the Moors again took control of Granada, and under their rule, an era of beautiful architecture, the Alhambra was built.

During the time intervening between the beginning of the thirteenth century and the discovery of America by Columbus in 1492, the changes of the greater or lesser dynasties of the constantly quarreling provinces of the peninsula were something too intricate to recall at this time. The year of Columbus's great achievement, 1492, was also the year of the final surrender of Granada by the Moors and of the full confirmation of the rule of Fredding and and Jeoballa in Spain

Ferdinand and Isabella in Spain.

In 1520, after King Charles had gone to Germany to become Emperor, while still retaining his cruel hold upon the Spanish throne, a revolutionary organization, in desperation at the oppression with which the Spanish people were treated, raised an army of 20,000 men and levied war against him. This revolution was soon crushed and its leaders executed. The insurgents, as well as others, were then forced into allegiance to their foreign ruler. Prescott says:

The Government of Castile, assuming the power both of making the laws and of executing them, became in its attributes nearly as absolute as Turkey.

The several reigns from the Austrian, Philip I, through King Charles, afterwards the Emperor Charles V, Philip II, Philip III, Philip IV, and Charles II, ruling through the long period to the year 1700, says a distinguished author-

Fill the century of national decline, full as it is of crowned idiocy, hypochondria, and madness, the result of incestuous marriages or natural weakness.

The splendid and prosperous Spanish Empire—its vast conquests, discoveries, and foreign wars—became transformed into a bauble for the caprice of favorites under their successors.

After a few years of inglorious reign, Charles II, the last of the line in descent from Philip of Austria and Joanna of Spain, being without an heir, bequeathed his crown at death to the Bourbon prince, Philip of France, Duke of Anjou, who became Philip V of Spain.

The recognized authentic history of the Spanish Inquisition, compiled and published in London in 1826, from the original works of Llorente, former secretary of the Inquisition and chancellor of the University of Toledo, has the following by way of

All the records of the fantastic cruelties of the heathen world do not afford so appalling a picture of human weakness and depravity as the authentic and genuine documents of the laws and proceedings of this Holy Office, which professed to act under the influence of the doctrines of the Redeemer of the World.

This agency of murder and administrator of torture in the name of Christianity continued in vigorous existence in Spain from the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, about 1483, until even after the beginning of the present century. Since the year 1800, and during the term of the forty-fourth inquisitor-general, Don Ramon Joseph de Arce, archbishop of Saragossa, which lasted eleven years, twenty individuals were condemned to public penance. The curate of Esco was condemned to the flames, but the grand inquisitor and the supreme council would not permit the execution of the sentence.

During the existence of the Holy Office, or Inquisition, 31,912 persons were condemned and perished in the flames, 17,659 were burned in effigy, and nearly 300,000 were condemned to severe and terrible personness. The last retired to severe The last victim burned alive perished and terrible penances.

The above is the mildest and simplest statement of a history of Spanish cruelty to Spaniards from the day of the discovery of America to the Independence of the United States.

For some three hundred years church and state maintained a partnership which signalized its existence and continuance by such horrors that a just God might have easy cause to close the human account of an entire race of people. Yet during all this long and awful history not a nation of the earth ventured to in-terpose its veto to the carnival of woe.

I do not overlook the fact that the modern legislation of Spain as applied to her subjects at home and in the provinces is a wonderful advance over that of former years. I would not consent to an act of real injustice to the Spain of to-day, if such were proposed, no matter what may have been the offenses of the past, and it is cause for congratulation that a degree of enlightenment has taken the place of much of the ill doing of the earlier days. But I must insist that a country which licensed and authorized the butcheries of Pizarro and the conquests of Cortez, and which ordained the depopulation of Cuba and the bloody marches in Central and Southern America, shall not carry on a war of exter-mination against Cuba. I have said nothing of the dread career of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands, or of the thousand years of concentrated demonism chargeable to the Spanish dominion of the Cross and the Sword. I assert that the American nation will not much longer quietly permit the domination of Spanish absolutism under the very shadow of our institutions, and hardly a gunshot away from our southeastern shores. That absolutism has had its apt training during forty generations of unbridled lust, and it could not if it would teach the doctrines of peace or permit the equality of man.

It seems to be a paradox, but nothing is more true than that the periods of greatest prosperity and glory for Spain were those when the Arabs were in control; again when the Moors were in full power; and still again when the Jews were the foremost race

I protest that a people with such a history and such an education can have no just claim to a participation in the control of any territorial possession on this hemisphere.

There may be no warrant in international law for any interference between a government and its subjects, provided that government belongs to the family of nations, or is recognized as one of the powers of the earth. Still, does not the great heart of humanity beat in sympathy with the poor souls apparently forgotten by the Master and left to bear the burdens of cruel and relentless oppression? Is there no way, no light, no hope? Must the brutality of might alone define the offense and mete out the benalty, with no human power to whom intercession may be penalty, with no human power to whom intercession may be made? Oh, Spain! oh, Spain! when shall thy day be fulfilled? Was there no loyal Spaniard who would and could, amid all these centuries, stay the hand of death or raise the sword of justice while there was time to save?

Let us turn to Spain in America. I shall speak briefly of the career of the Austro-Burgundian rulers of Spain in the treatment of their colonies on this continent. I shall state in few words how, from the baptism of innocent blood with which the sons of Spain and the fathers of the church deluged South Amersons of Spain and the fathers of the church deluged South America and Mexico, there have arisen prosperous states and nations. I do not admit that these newer republics, which once owed tribute to a Spanish mother country, are unable to meet the responsibilities of self-government. They may make sad blunders, and may not come up to the full and high standard which the United States of America has set before the world, but they will strive to reach it. They aim to the noblest, and will reach what they are able. I believe to them may be justly applied the motto of Kansas: "Ad astra per aspera," meaning "To the stars through difficulties," which is a free translation of "Excelsior," the motto of New York. And during all their troubles and struggles for of New York. And during all their troubles and struggles for governmental freedom what enlightened nation anywhere made their hopes and cause her own? None. Not one. They have reached the plane of self-responsibility and self-assertion without the aid of even the United States.

Mexico emerged from Spanish control and overturned a French invasion without the interposition of the United States or the aid of any other country. But I now suggest that another and better day is about to dawn. The United States must to-morrow, if not to-day, give vitality to her sympathy for the oppressed and the weak. I desire to urge and to claim a policy and the adoption of a doctrine for our nation in advance of that which has hereto-fore been sanctioned. The United States, by virtue of our history, of our origin, our growth, and recognizing our proud and proper place in the honorable annals of the world, is the chosen country to not a new charter into the code of international states. to put a new chapter into the code of international statutes and to declare a new and advanced watchword for the civilized world, If we fail to keep up with the march of sentiment and to mold into effective law such salutary principles as we solemnly believe are just and right, and such as are demanded by the progress of the world, we shall neglect a high duty and privilege and omit a the world, we shall neglect a high duty and privilege and omit a sublime opportunity.

While all the provinces which have rebelled and separated from Spain have, as I have shown, become prosperous and fairly well conditioned, independent countries, the feeble old mother country has gradually fallen into lower and lower estate, depending and almost relying for existence upon the stolen gold levied upon Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. Spain continues to be what she always has been—a robber nation. I speak now of the nation, and not of her people. Some of the best and noblest names of the ages come to us from Spain, where, unhappily, too many of them met their sad and melancholy fates. And to-day, as well as in recent times, there are many noble men and women as well as in recent times, there are many noble men and women who owe allegiance to the Spanish throne, who adhere to her cause, hoping and striving to improve and make better her present and future, but who can never outlive or wipe out the traditions which have established her reputation and fixed her status among the kingdoms of the Eastern Hemisphere.

If we wait for precedent we shall wait forever. If a precedent is needed we shall make one.

We violated every precedent by the declaration of our own independence on July 4, 1776. We had no precedent, nor did we even ask for advice as to the change in 1789 from a confederation to a union of States. When we announced the Monroe doctrine in 1823, it was in defiance of precedent, and was the determination of a rule which has become a law and will never be gainsaid.

When we announced not many months ago that we should intervene in the matter of the Venezuela boundary and see for ourselves if our rights were to be concluded by foreign dictation, we followed no precedent but that of good American common sense.

And common sense has won.

I desire to say in this connection that, although at the time of the action by Congress upon the Venezuelan question, including the message of the President of the United States, there was a feeling in some parts of the country that the National Government was doing wrong, there is no man in this country to-day who, in the light of what has since happened in the practical settlement of that question, is not ready to admit that the Government of the United States did right and has secured by its action the recognition of one of the greatest principles in connection with the policy of our country in its relations with foreign governments which has been accomplished for the last fifty years. I desire to say that in approbation of the result, as I understand it, of a substantial settlement of the Venezuelan question and of a substantial recognition by the British Government of what we in this country call the Monroe doctrine.

These instances only show that up to this time no assumption of authority in regard to American affairs which this Government has made has ever been successfully contested.

ment has made has ever been successfully contested.

We now have reached the time to take another step in advance.

We have already proclaimed that the United States will have something to say regarding matters affecting the American continent, and we should now announce that the speedy termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Mexican Gulf is necessary alike to the welfare of those islands and to the people of the United States.

The present situation can not continue. A population of 950,000 white Cubans and 500,000 colored Cubans, aggregating 1,450,000 persons, will never yield and ought never to submit to the bloody military rule of 160,000 Spaniards. The Spanish element which has always controlled and dominated Cuba since its discovery numbers only about one-tenth its population. Columbus declared "this is the most beautiful land ever beheld by human eyes," in October, 1492. Now, in 1896, it is given over to devastation and destruction. Within its borders rages a war which on both sides is declared to be a war either of extermination on the one hand, is declared to be a war either of extermination on the one hand, or liberty and Spanish exclusion on the other. This condition must cease. The Spanish, after two years' war, have failed to establish peace and the insurgents have failed to reach their hoped-for independence.

This war of extermination must stop.

This Congress of the United States has already recognized by solemn resolution the belligerent rights of Cuba, but so long as it has not received the Executive approval it has no force. And if it had, it is conceded that some other course must be taken. The question to be determined is not fully clear, except that the war must cease. Its consideration and discussion involves far more than the mere abstract question of the territorial possession and ownership by Spain of an isolated or insular tract of land lying on the Caribbean waters of this continent. A study of the his toric facts, showing when and in what manner the rich and fertile Island of Cuba became the richest and brightest jewel of the Castilian crown, is necessary to an intelligent understanding of the relations which obtain between the United States and Spain. And in much greater degree is it necessary that we should understand the logic of the events which have led to the assertion of stand the logic of the events which have led to the assertion of the American doctrine by our own country.

The growth of the republican idea upon the American continent, and its spontaneous expansion over both North and South America, in the very face of an exclusive monarchical domination in the Eastern Hemisphere, has logically and properly forced the United States to a declaration of our national policy. The Monroe doctrine, once almost an experimental declaration, with its now seventy years of continued approval, has become a venerated principle never to be infringed or violated.

American republicanism has already reached far into its second century, and has outgrown and passed beyond the incidental antagonisms and unavoidable warfare of ideas which its appearance upon this continent immediately after the Revolution had invited. The timidity with which the representative American citizen formerly approached the vicinity of royalty, and the awe with which he viewed the purple, has changed to a self-consciousness and a pride of country which yields to no monarchist in the world.

But with these changes others have come. At the same time

But with these changes others have come. At the same time that America was advancing, and Americans assuming the lead on this hemisphere, Spain has been retrograding. That vast area in South America and in Central America which once owed allegiance to Spain has passed from her grasp, and has been carved into a dozen republics. From Chile to Venezuela nearly every state in South America deems itself able to cope with all its Latin cousins of Europe, and there is little doubt that a European war unjustly waged against any one of the Spanish-American republics would now be the signal for a union of them all in the cause of the one threatened. All these countries which formerly paid tribute to Spain have, as occasion offered, declared their independence and become self-governing states. Their separate sovereignty and independence have been recognized by the world, and they appear competent to maintain the same. It may be that the standard and quality of their republicanism will be questioned by some other nations, but considering the genealogy of their inhabitants, and the difficulties surrounding their advancement, it rests not in the heart of any citizen of the United States to disparage their progress or criticise their growth.

Let us look at the Argentine Republic and study the instructive lesson which it presents. That really wonderful country has now a population of about 4,000,000. Its advantages of climate, soil, a population of about 4,000,000. Its advantages of climate, soil, and political freedom have drawn to it an average of 50,000 new permanent settlers annually for the last five years. The greater portion of these were from the Latin countries of Europe, and at least one-third of them came with families. They have merged readily into the producing class at their new home, and their accession has been marked by a vast and significant increase in the agricultural production of Argentina. That increase during the five years last past is aptly presented by the following tables of exports:

Nearly all the asses are shipped to Bolivia; the horses to Brazil, Chile, and Uruguay; the sheep to Chile, Brazil, and Great Britain; the mules to Chile and Bolivia; and the horned cattle to Brazil, Chile, Uruguay, and Great Britain.

I have not referred to the mineral industry, the wine product, the dairy product, the high-wine and whisky product, the shipment of fine hard woods and lumber, or to many other products of which the exports amount to many millions of dollars annually.

I have thus taken the Argentine Republic and its wondrous growth and advancement in material wealth and possibilities as typical of the future of other Spanish-American Republics.

Look a moment at the Republic of Chile, and glance at a very few figures regarding a country of which we hardly know any-

The volume of Chilean trade statistics for 1894 shows as follows:

The aggregate trade of the Republic, both foreign and coasting, in 1894, amounted to $338,490,753; of this amount, $148,223,539 represent the foreign and $190,267,214 the coasting trade. There was a decrease, as compared with 1893, of $5,116,921 in the foreign trade and an increase of $8,096,292 in the coasting

The Chilean Society for the Promotion of Manufactures has issued a pamphlet on the subject of "The industrial establishments in the Department of Valparaiso," from which the following facts are taken: The total number of manufactories is 417; the value of the raw material consumed in 1895 is given at $20,057,573; operatives employed, 12,616.

Chile has a commercial marine of 191 vessels, of which 40 are steamers. The country contains rich gold and silver mines. It also produces large amounts of nitrate of soda, borate of soda, and iodine, and in the south and center districts has extensive mines of copper and iron and coal. It has over 1,800 miles of railroad

Brazil, formerly an empire, now a republic, is rapidly striding forward, notwithstanding the existence of internal dissensions in some interior provinces. She has about 8,000 miles of railway and possesses a vast territory which produces great quantities of sugar, coffee, and india rubber. The exports of rubber alone from the port of Para reach about 50,000,000 pounds annually, and the same port ships from twelve to fourteen million pounds of sees a para para many mith much cotton and tabasec. Her mines of cacao per annum, with much cotton and tobacco. Her mines yield largely of the precious metals and precious stones. Brazil has a public revenue of nearly $70,000,000 and exports immense quantities of her productions.

And so on, the productions and growing industries of all the various States of the southern continent might be recited in some detail, but enough has been said to convey the idea I wish to present as to the wonderful capabilities of the southern republics and the advancement of their people. Cuba, in her productions and resources, in her history, and in the character of her population, closely resembles these countries. When emancipated from the domination of tyranny she will outstrip them in the race of pros perity and industry.

I wish specially to emphasize the opinion which I hold, that nearly every one of these governments has in some quality or another become worthy of the admiration of the enlightened world. It can not be denied, however, that there is ground in too many instances for the criticism of our people upon the inconstancy, the cruelties practiced, and the revolutionary spirit which exists in some of those States. But with their advancing prosperity it can readily be seen that the tendency everywhere is toward humanity and decency in social and political affairs. The evils which are justly chargeable against many of these people are their which are justly chargeable against many of these people are their legitimate inheritance from warlike ancestry educated by centuries of monarchism to the trade of bloodshed and cruelty. It is not easy to transform such a population into quiet citizens, loving a quiet life. The very birthright which many of them cherish has brought with it into their daily lives the evils of an ancestral spirit which will require years of education and association to record the properties of overcome. But republicanism is coming to be understood. The success of the Argentine Republic, Brazil, Chile, and Mexico under the wholesome restraints of good government and wise management have furnished to all the others an example of prosperity which they will not be slow to emulate.

perity which they will not be slow to emulate.

The lesson shows what can be done, and why should they not participate in the benefits? What Buenos Ayres and Chile and Mexico have done may not Bolivia, Peru, or Venezuela also do? It is too much to hope that the day of domestic strife and revolution has passed, but we may hope that the day of education and right administration will have its turn. And if this be true with reference to the weaker South American States, why not with Cuba? By what bond does Spain hold Cuba? Not the bond of relationship and natural affection. Not mere national pride in the possession and preservation of territorial or colonial dependencies. That sion and preservation of territorial or colonial dependencies, pride was humiliated and broken years and years ago when she bade farewell to her South American people.

The only bond which exists, and which by the fiction of antecedent possession and occupation is held sufficient, is that which enables her to levy millions upon millions of tribute upon the rich sugar fields of the unfortunate island. The contest of the Cubans is a contest for freedom against an absent monarchy across the sea. It is a warfare against a ruler who is practically an alien and whose methods are simply those which might shall dictate. It is a struggle for the right to live and breathe the free air of a good government.

The colonial dependencies of Great Britain and of other great countries are usually governed in a manner to benefit and improve the welfare of the colony. The government of Cuba by Spain is merely a tyranny, the governmental power being but a machine by which the profits of the resident sugar grower go to fill the pockets of the Spaniard 2,000 miles away. A government which years ago suffered dismemberment by the complete severance of its South American territories, which has been humiliated by their success as independent countries, finds its last claim to a profitable dependency now threatened. The people of Cuba, who have borne oppressions and misgovernment for many generations. have invited their oppressors to a final determination, and have bidden them welcome to a feast of war and a carnival of desolation. Right or wrong, the struggle continues, and if we can judge by the history of the men of both armies, it will continue until the last dollar is spent, the last plantation is ruined, and the last machete has fallen from the hands of the last man. The fighters there on either side neither give nor ask for quarter. The warfare between Chile and Peru, where hospitals and ambulance service were not needed after a battle, will have its counterpart to some extent on the battlefields of Cuba. The successful army will not be burdened with wounded enemies, when a few hours of throat cutting will make all quiet as the grave. It is on hours of throat cutting will make all quiet as the grave. It is on one hand a war to win, and on the other a fight to death. The best blood of Andalusia, what is left of it, is deemed not too sacred to be sacrificed if need be in the contest with the patriots, the mixed races who are risking their all for the liberty of Cuba.

To the average Spanish gentleman, Spain is the object of adoration, but Spain without Cuba is to him the world without the sun. The revenue from Cuba has been the chief joy of Spain for many years, and if Cuba should now be separated from the Spanish throne, the sun would cease to shine upon the Albembre.

throne, the sun would cease to shine upon the Alhambra.

Cuba to-day is lost to Spain. The public proclamation of Spanish defeat may not have been officially and definitely announced, but in truth and fact the submission of Cuba will never again be but in truth and fact the submission of Cuba will never again be yielded as of old. The tribute of twenty-five to forty million dollars annually, so long exacted, will never again replenish the treasury of Spain. The struggles of 1895 and 1896 may sadly cripple Cuba, but they will ruin Spain. Cuba, with its wonderful soil and climate, and its unparalleled capabilities, will regain in material wealth and growth under benign influences far more than she has lost. The blood of her people spilled upon her soil will yield a growth of independent citizenship consecrated to liberty. This age is not an age of retrogression. The world of liberty. This age is not an age of retrogression. The world of to-day is not wedded to barbarism in order to perpetuate tyranny or relieve tottering dynasties.

Cuba has a population of more than a million and a half of people, of which over a million boast their white blood and half a million are colored, yet the grandsons of Spain who live in Cuba and have become identified with the Cuban cause far outnumber those who adhere to Spain. The logic of the insurrection means liberty for Cuba. What does the world care for the beauties of all the earlies and release in Spain careful at the care in the all the castles and palaces in Spain, enshrouded as they are in the cerements of woe, which but recall an awful history instead of a glorious past. Shall it be that the nation where the Inquisition found a congenial home and where the so-called Holy Brother-hood was established for the crushing out of life and liberty and where manhood and womanhood were made the playthings of brutal might—shall it be that the incoming century will chronicle a longer continuance of such power almost within sight of the unfurled Stars and Stripes?

An Almighty God reigns still in the universe. All the petty subterfuges of princes and nobles, of kings and tyrants, will fail them in the day of their adversity.

A few years ago an Austrian prince of the highest personal character was selected by an Emperor of France as the agency by which an obnoxious monarchical system should be reestablished on the American continent. Louis Napoleon placed Maximilian upon the throne of Mexico. A people largely of Spanish descent, led by Juarez, a full-blooded Indian, met and overcame the foreign invaders, and a noble Republic now stands at our border, while Maximilian gave his life as a forfeit for the attempt. The continent of America has not proved a favorable soil for the growth of monarchies, and the beginning of the new century is not a favorable time for even the toleration of such oppressors as maintain themselves only by bloodshed.

Whatever may be said regarding our duty as a nation toward a friendly power which is striving to suppress an insurrection in Cuba, still no one, either in America or Europe, misunderstands the situation. Every humane heart, American or foreign, sympathizes deeply and sincerely, not with the rapine and pillage by which the insurgents in Cuba seek to weaken their enemies, but with the spirit which leads them to look constantly and with hope toward that star of liberty which they believe will lead them to

I repeat that Cuba is already lost to Spain. Were the struggle to stop now, the income to Spain from the enormous exactions she has always levied upon Cuba would be lost for some years. Many thousands of young men of the flower of Spanish manhood have been sacrificed to maintain the power of a dynasty. Many thousands of honest, sincere, and loyal boys have left their homes in Spain never to return. Many a mother weeps unavailing tears for the lad who left her side a year ago, and who now sleeps in

As a recent writer says: "The story of Cuba is a tragedy." Yes; that is true, and it is also true that from the day in 1492 when Columbus took possession of Cuba in the name of the Spanish sovereigns down to this day in 1896, a period of four hundred and four years, there has been a continuous tragedy, a history of wrong, of deceit, of murder, of every sort of crime and outrage known to man, unequaled on the earth. When the great discoverer proclaimed Christianity upon that peaceful and beautiful shore, could he have foreseen that for four centuries a constant and neverceasing wail of despair and suffering and death were to follow—had Columbus known them what we know now, that every foothold of the New World obtained by Spain would be the scene of the most fearful villainies, the most awful and most unheard-of outrages—he would have forsworn his religion and expatriated himself. The history of Spanish colonial domination has everywhere and always been the same. Whether it was under Pizarro in Peru, Cortez in Mexico, Balboa at the Istamus, or the soldiers in Cuba, the policy was ever the same. In a little over forty years all the original natives of the fertile island, nearly half a million in number, had been extirpated. Then in 1524 negro slavery was introduced into Cuba by the Spanish rulers. Judging by the impartial record of history, the highest cardinal virtues of the Spanish soldiery were always murder, robbery, and brutal outrage. Neither age nor sex, nationality nor religion was spared; and if modern history is to be believed there is nothing in the dreary and awful picture to relieve the Spanish nation from the charge of being the common enemy of humanity. The barbarisms of the savage tribes of the world for several hundred years were peaceful and childlike in comparison with the barbarities committed under and by the authority of Christian sovereigns of Spain.

savage tribes of the world for several fundred years were peaceful and childlike in comparison with the barbarities committed under and by the authority of Christian sovereigns of Spain.

The history of Spanish domination in any given place or time from the year 1500 to 1700 was one which Satan himself might emulate. I have not referred at all to the now-existing contest waged in Spain's largest dependency, the Philippine Islands. Hardly anybody in this country realizes that those fertile islands, several hundred in number, cover 115,000 square miles of territory, and contain five and a half millions of inhabitants. They have nearly four times the population of Cuba, nearly three times the area, and they export about $25,000,000 of products annually. They pay tribute to the same taskmaster, and Spain in their management has harnessed the church to its chariot of misrule. The same old partnership of the Cross and the Sword is made the agency for their humiliation and enslavement. Spain has still another dependency—its penal colony at Ceuta, on the coast of Africa. Of all Spanish colonies this is the most prosperous and flourishing. On this spot of desert land the population has grown and increased by penal deportations from Cuba, from Puerto Rico, and from the Philippines, until now amidst the thieves and vagabonds held there thousands of the brightest, best, and most intelligent of her colonial subjects are wasting away their lives as political prisoners. Those who escape the garrote or the bullet in Cuba or in other provinces may there live out a few years, where their voices are as completely hushed as in the grave.

It is doubtless true, and I concede, that the judicial and the law-

It is doubtless true, and I concede, that the judicial and the lawinterpreting authority in Spain is an able and intelligent department of that Government. I have even doubts if any monarchy of the age has preserved a more able judicial establishment than Spain, or one where the law at home is determined more independently or resolutaly.

But this is far different in Cuba. The judicial tribunals in Cuba, owing their selection to the preferences of the authorities in Spain, have come to look upon their offices not as independent law-defining courts, but as mere clerkships of the dynasty in power for the simple recording and announcement of the will of their superiors. They have become often mere corrupt bargain-making officials who thrive upon the spoils which come to their hands, and who thrive best when the people at large suffer most.

The American people are coming to the consideration of the Cuban situation as they already have in certain other cases, as a great political question, a continental question, if you please. And being a political continental question, it will be decided ultimately by the continent whose interests are most clearly involved. Geographically considered, Cuba can not belong to Spain. A line drawn from the south Florida headlands to the mouth of the Orinoco places Cuba on the American side. The great Antillean sea which surrounds Cuba and other islands is but an extension of the Mexican Gulf, and geographically Cuba belongs, as politically it ought to belong, to the American Continent of Republics, and not to Spain or Europe. Geographically Cuba is in American Continent of Republics, can waters and politically it is entitled to statehood in the continent of American Republics.

This great continental question, therefore, when stripped of all its complications, becomes, in plain and simple language, Shall Cuba be free? This country will never consent to the transformation of Cuba into a slave pen for the holding in servitude of the captured patriots and insurgents who are fighting for the dearest rights of men. We will not permit that island, a land which has the brightest possibilities for a people of intelligence and enterprise, to be made the abiding place of death and destruction. She lies too near our land of freedom to remain the military prison of the most cruel and unrelenting policy on earth. This war now being waged is avowedly a war of extermination, or utter crushing out of liberty on Cuba's 50,000 square miles of territory. Think of it! An island which in ordinary years exports more than a million tons of sugar and many millions of dollars in value of other products. Has the United States no interest in our own trade and commerce with an island from which we receive fully 90 per cent of the vast sugar product and much the larger part of all her other productions? The interests of the United States, counting all things passing between the two countries, reach perhaps $100,000,000 annually, and already this trade has been practically wiped out. The Cuban exports of sugar alone have fallen during the current year—1896—from above a million tons to less than a hundred thousand. The tobacco trade is dead. Neither will revive until war stops and the Spaniards get out of Cuba. That is the only solution of the trade problem.

It is about time that this free country ceased to be a police establishment for the aiding of the most outrageous warfare against a struggling people. The Spanish Government three weeks ago bought and shipped for General Weyler numbers of mules and horses raised in this country and purchased in Missouri and other Western States. Under present stringent rules as applied by our Government, every Federal official is a spy to inform against any attempt to convey arms or clothing or supplies to General Gomez or General Macco, or the Cuban army. Men are now under arrest in the United States for attempting to succor their friends and relatives in Cuba. Has Spain any sympathy for or friendship with this country? Americans have been imprisoned and punished in Cuba for even expressing sorrow for the poor young medical students who were cruelly shot and murdered in Habana a few years ago. There is not a family of any standing in Cuba which has not lost one or more of its members by arbitrary arrest and sunrise murder by armed troops, who marched their victims to the place of blood and shot them in the back. I was shown a paper a few minutes ago containing a large number of pictures of men who were captured as prisoners while engaged in the insurgent army, and shot down in cold blood. There is no regard in Cuba for civilized warfare, but it is murder, and nothing else, on the part of the Spanish army. It is stated by the Cubans that during the revolution of 1868, in the five years between 1868 and 1873, there were 2,927 prisoners executed, and from March, 1869, to November, 1873, more than 4,670 persons were reported captured and never again heard of.

In that war the Cubans lost 45,000 lives and the Spaniards 190,000, and during its ten years' continuance more than a thousand millions of dollars were expended. This was all levied upon Cuba, and Spain paid nothing. Out of this war many Spanish military commanders and civil officials made immense fortunes, running into the millions. All these were made at the expense of Cuba.

In the present war, which has lasted about twenty-one months, Spain has wasted over a hundred millions, and has put into the field possibly 200,000 men and boys. Spain is beggared to-day, and unless she can continue her grasp upon Cuba she will show to the world the end of the worst-governed country known in two thousand years.

As I have before intimated, I believe it to be the duty of the United States to use the great power attaching to the nation to declare and to maintain, as a prerogative of right, belonging generally to republicanism, and specifically to this Republic, that no charnel house of ruin shall be continued in the West Indian waters, whose waves break at our very front gate, any longer than the time it shall require to break it up. I put it on that ground, and on the ground of humanity as well, because the world knows that no humanity is manifested there on the part of the Spanish army. And if the duty of suppressing this damning blot and erasing it forever from sight shall fall alone upon the United States, so be it. Have we fallen so low as to have forgotten the sacrifices which men of genius and character and honor made in behalf of this country in its days of trouble? Have we forgotten and enshrouded the glorious memory of Lafayette? Have we turned to the wall the pictures of Pulaski, of Steuben, of De Kalb, and others long since in glory? These men cast their lives and their fortunes at our feet that we might succeed. But we shall not stand alone in the warfare which may follow in behalf of common humanity. Nation after nation will make joint cause with us in such a struggle, and when we have succeeded and shall have made into law the principle, and made into history the fact, every other country worth naming will regret its mistake in not partici-other country worth naming will regret its mistake in not participating in the humane work.

The effort can not fail. We shall not wage any warfare for the acquisition of territory for ourselves. We shall not claim Cuba as a reward for saving her from the slaughter, but we will not see that fair island turned again to the mercies of wild beasts and vultures of war whose only stimulus is gain. Cuba libre—free Cuba—is the reward, and what a glorious reward will that be! Every citizen of the United States will feel that his birthright as an American freemen will mean something. Every lover of his an American freeman will mean something. Every lover of liban American freeman will mean something. Every lover of liberty the world over will exult in the progress and advancement of man. The breadth and stature of individual Americanism will be enlarged and ennobled. Society will feel that its doors need not be closed against wrong and oppression, for there will be none who dare molest and make afraid. A settlement is to be had. A settlement must be made. The account has been open and running long enough—yes, far too long. To its settlement we may properly invite the cooperation of all the Republics of the American Continent. But the end of the devastation must be determined. The United States must furnish the occasion, if it does not otherwise arise.

If other means fail, we may consider the propriety of a fair pur-

If other means fail, we may consider the propriety of a fair purchase of Cuba. That method has had its share of consideration under previous Administrations. It is not that we want the terri-under previous Administrations. It is not that we want the territory, but we mean that the trouble shall meet a just settlement and conclusion. Let the end come, and come quickly. Let the bloodshed cease, and let freedom and humanity be glorified.

The wisdom and discretion of an American President and Cabinet can certainly find a way to determine the trouble without imperiling the interests of our country or our people. I have little choice or preference as to the particular method, but I do want, and I know the public expects, a settlement on a humane and just basis and just basis.

The United States can do no less than to initiate this effort for humanity and liberty.

I can not more appropriately close these remarks than by giving the beautiful apostrophe to our Republic and its mission, delivered at Gettysburg in 1869 by an American poet, Bayard Taylor:

Now, in her seat secure,
Where distant menaces no more can reach her,
Our land in undivided freedom pure,
Becomes the unwilling world's unconscious teacher;
And day by day beneath serener skies,
The unshaken pillars of her palace rise—
Those Doric shafts, that lightly upward press,
And hide in grace their giant massiveness.

Mr. President, I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ISSUE OF BONDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—
Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Senator from Florida kindly to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendment of the other House to House bill 4052, which has just come over. It is a bill which passed the Senate at the last session, relating to validating some bonds of the Territory of New Mexico. I wish to move that the Senate concur in the House amend-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Hill in the chair). The Chair lays the amendment of the House of Representatives before the Senate. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; it is not necessary.
Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment will have to be read. It can not be passed upon without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 to the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg to state to the Senator from Colorado that I can not consent that a new bill which has been passed by the House shall be called up and put upon its passage in this way. Let it be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think perhaps after a statement I shall make to the Senator from Missouri he will revise his view of the measure measure

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I can not revise it. It is a new bill. I recollect the Senate bill very well, and this is an entirely new measure

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator that it is identically the same bill except that it does away with the objection which the President had to the measure. He was of opinion that the restrictive clause at the end prevented the operation of the bill. In other respects the bill is identical with the bill passed before. Mr. COCKRELL. Just let it be printed and lie on the table. I do not want to have it referred.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well. It has been to the committee of this body.

Mr. COCKRELL. It can be called up to-morrow. I can not keep the run of it from the reading, and wish to have it in print.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be ordered printed, and it will lie on the table for the present.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. CALL. I ask the indulgence of the Senate in order that the joint resolution which I introduced yesterday morning may be laid before the Senate and read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from Florida, which will be read.

The joint resolution (S. R. 164) recognizing the Republic of Cuba as a free and independent government was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States of America recognizes the Republic of Cuba as a free and independent government and accords to the people of Cuba all the rights of a sovereign and independent government in the ports and within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few brief ob-servations upon the joint resolution. Before doing so, however, I will ask the Secretary to read two certain communications which send to the desk.

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES, Matanzas, November 3, 1896.

Matanzes, November 3, 1896.

Sir: I have the honor to inform the Department that an interview was granted by Spanish authorities with Oscar Cespedes this morning at 9 o'clock, and his deposition taken. (See inclosure No. I.)

The civil governor sent for me last evening (8 o'clock) and informed me that the case of Mr. Cespedes had been transferred from military to civil jurisdiction, and that I could visit the prisoner at date given above. His apologies for delay in this case were profuse.

I find Mr. Cespedes to be an intelligent young man, barely 21 years of age. He is badly broken down in health and his memory somewhat affected. If his statement can be corroborated by his friends in Key West and elsewhere I feel sure my influence with the governor of this province can procure him an early trial and release; in fact, I hope to secure his release without trial.

Any instructions or information relative to this case would be greatly appreciated.

ciated. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

A. C. BRICE, United States Consul.

Hon. WILLIAM W. ROCKHILL, Assistant Secretary of State, Washington, D. C. [Inclosure No. 1.]

DEPOSITION OF OSCAR DE CESPEDES, TAKEN AT THE JAIL AT MATANZAS, OCTOBER 3, 1896.

DEPOSITION OF OSCAR DE CESPEDES, TAKEN AT THE JAIL AT MATANAS, OCTOBER 3, 1896.

I am a native of Key West, Fla.; 29 years of age; came to Cuba on the 3d of July, 1896, on board the tug Commodore, as a reporter to the Key West Herald.

I was captured on September 2, 1896, at "Hato de Jicarita," near Zapata, by the Spanish column of Colonel Molina.

At the time I was captured I was lying by the roadside under shelter of trees and sick with fever, and without arms of any nature whatever.

I was then placed on a horse and started under march and ill treated all the way to Tüira de Macurijes, the leader of my horse striking me with the barrel of his rifle the blows meant for the horse. I was left at Tüira de Macurijes two days and finally brought to Matanzas and confined at San Severino Castle, and on account of my sickness I was sent to the infirmary of the city jail, where I have remained to date.

I am a native-born American citizen, and do hereby declare under oath that I came to Cuba, as before stated, as a reporter, and that I have been in nowise connected with the insurrection now going on in Cuba, and ask that my early release be procured by the Government of the United States.

I further state that I have been sick with fever during the last three months, on account of which my health is very much broken down, and at times become hopeless of life.

I have been fairly treated at the jail infirmary.

OSCAR DE CESPEDES

I have been fairly treated at the jail infirmary.

(Signed) OSCAR DE CESPEDES.

Before me, witness my hand and official seal at Matanzas the day and year first above written.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of this consulate at Matanzas, the 3d day of October, 1896.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Secretary to read the letter of Dr. Moreno. The Secretary read as follows:

WEST TAMPA CITY, FLA., December 5, 1896.

WEST TAMPA CITY, FLA., December 5, 1896.

Dear Call: Another American citizen is imprisoned in Habana jail. He was arrested in Mangas and conducted to Habana. His name is José Gonzales, an old man, also is deaf. He is a naturalized American, and has resided in Philadelphia for twenty-six years with cigar manufacturing. His brother has written me from Key West. Please investigate the subject through the Secretary of State.

Oscar Céspeves, a native of Key West, and imprisoned in Matanzas, will be tried by court-martial, I have read to-night in the Florida Citizen.

What action do you think the President will take? Will it be favorable to Cuba? And the Senate?

I am, very truly, yours,

M. R. MORENO.

Hon. W. CALL, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, since I have been a member of the Senate, for the last eighteen years, I have been introducing resolutions at every session for some action on the part of the Government of the United States which would relieve the Island of Cuba from the difficulties of the government under which she has existed up to this time. I have proposed that she should be acquired by purchase, not annexed to this country, but rendered independent by the guaranty of her bonds by the Government of the United States. I have urged that negotiations should be instituted by which some method of pacifying the island and instituted by which some method of pacifying the island and of developing its resources under good government might be resorted to. I came to this body immediately after the conclusion of the ten years' war, which terminated in 1878-79, and which presented to the world the evidence of a united people determined to establish their own independence of the Government of Spain, exhibiting in that long period of time a capacity to defend themselves and to establish by force a government of their own, and who were finally induced to lay down their arms only by promise of autonomy or self-government, through which the people of Cuba should be enabled entirely to govern themselves and control their own affairs.

Ten years expired, and the same condition of things continued in the island. The same feeling of revolt, of opposition to the rule of the Spanish Government, continued. Whether or not it was justifiable is not the question for us to consider. It is a fact that here are a people who for the last twenty-five years have determined to make themselves independent, and now, after a period of three years, are in possession of nearly two-thirds of the territory of the island, as the President himself states. The President, in his message, with the singular felicity of expression which belongs to him, says that we must continue to wait. He says:

Until we face the contingencies suggested, or the situation is by other incidents imperatively changed, we should continue in the line of conduct heretofore pursued, thus in all circumstances exhibiting our obedience to the requirements of public law and our regard for the duty enjoined upon us by the position we occupy in the family of nations.

Mr. President, what reason can be given for not taking some action recognizing the fact that here are a people who have established a government for themselves? Who has a right to say that because it is or is not a civil government, but a military government, it shall not be recognized?

In what part of the public law of nations is the proposition contained that a people may not establish a military government? What is Russia; what is Germany; what are all the autocratic governments of the world but governments resting upon military power—upon force? And why should we consider the question whether a not those people proceed by girl processes? But tion whether or not those people proceed by civil processes? But they do. They have an organized government; and the question for us is, How shall we exert the power that is in our hands to perform the legitimate duties of government in the protection of perform the legitimate duties of government in the protection of our own citizens and our commercial rights and interests in another country? What shall we do? We can not try Spain, as my learned friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], has done in his arraignment here, because of her history. The history of Spain is full of grandeur. She presents characters as distinguished as any in the line of history for charity, for bravery, for intellect, and we can not try her by her history.

If we shall seek to condemn Spain by her history, what shall we say of the illustrious characters whom she has given to the world? What of Isabella, the model of all the beauties and virtues of womanhood? What of the greatest soldier and captain named in all history, the great Captain Gonsalvo de Cordova? What of the conquest of the French in Italy? Of him the great Captain Prescott, in his history of Ferdinand and Isabella, says:

With this insignificant force we shall then see the Kingdom of Naples conquered and the best generals and armies of France annihilated. An important innovation effected in military science; * * * a thorough reform introduced in the arms and discipline of the Spanish soldier; and the organization completed of that valiant infantry, which is honestly eulogized by a French writer as irresistible in attack and impossible to rout, and which carried the banners of Spain victorious for more than a century over the most distant parts of Europe.

What of that splendid scene described by Washington Irving in the Siege of Baza in Granada in these words:

As the host drew nearer they descried a stately dame magnificently attired, whom they soon discovered to be the Queen. She was riding on a mule, the sumptuous trappings of which were resplendent with gold and reached to the ground. On her right hand rode her daughter, the Princess Isabella, equally splendid in her array, and on her left the venerable grand cardinal of Spain. A noble train of ladies and cavaliers followed her, together with pages and esquires and a numerous guard of hidalgos of high rank arrayed in superb armor. When the veteran Mohammed ben Hassan beheld that this was the Queen Isabella, arriving in state to take up her residence in the camp, his heart failed him; he shook his head mournfully, and, turning to his captains, "Cavaliers," said he, "the fate of Baza is decided!"

What picture of greater heroism does history paint than this? We have nothing to do with the question of Spanish history. are now considering in this resolution what is the duty of the Government of the United States to its own people, not to humanity. I confess there is a duty that every government owes to humanity, even at the risk of war. There are higher considerations, but the question now is, What duty does this Government owe to its own citizens, to its commercial relations with Cuba? How shall we protect the American citizens now languishing in prison how Cespedes, taken without arms, taken without participation in the war against Spain, confined for months without a trial? It may be that the necessities of military government in Cuba may furnish some kind of excuse, but they afford no relief to this Government from its duty.

These are but a few instances; hundreds of American citizens have been languishing for months and months in the jails and castles of Cuba, and have been transported to Ceuta—American citizens entitled to the protection of this Government. Taking possession of Cuba will not relieve those American citizens, nor will the declaration of this Government that we recognize the independence of Cuba. That is a different subject. But how shall we prevent the destruction of American commercial rights? By recognizing the only power that over two-thirds of that island can protect the American citizen and the property of the citizen of the United States found there.

That is the statement of the President. That is true. For three years the interior of that island has been under the dominion of the insurgent forces organized as a republic. What justification, the insurgent forces organized as a republic. What justification, then, in the light of this fact, can there be for not protecting the property of the citizens of the United States acquired under treaty regulations? What better argument for the passage of this resolution is there than the fact that Spain is impotent to enforce the rights of American citizens in the territory of Cuba? We may demand of Spain indemnity; we may insist that she shall give the protection needed; but how can she do it when she is compelled to withdraw her forces and to maintain them in the garrisons and the cities of the Gulf?

Mr. President, the first duty of this country is to protect its citizens. How was it in the case of the Virginius? What did the Government of Great Britain do? They demanded at the muzzle of the cannon that there should be delivered to them the subjects of Queen Victoria who had been captured, while our own people were left to be the victims of arbitrary power. And so history has come on down. The reproach does not belong to this Administration alone that we have not protected and are not protecting the citizens of the United States and the property of the citizens of the United States. This same proposition of the President was made during the Administration of President Grant—I say it made during the Administration of Fresident Grant—I say it with no kind of reproach—but the same proposition of delay, delay until some contingency existed in which the power of the Spanish Government was entirely exhausted. And here, now, after the lapse of twenty years, after a three-years war, after the maintenance of the organized government, we are still told that we must still remain quiet; that we must not acknowledge that which is a fact—the power of these people to expert which is a fact—the power of those people to exert government over two-thirds of that island, and protect the property of Amer-ican citizens there, and the lives of American citizens there. Mr. President, I can see no reason whatever for failing to make promptly this recognition of an existing fact, the independence of Cuba, and giving to it as a government the same rights that are accorded to Spain in the ports and jurisdiction of the United States.

If you do not choose, you need not amend your neutrality laws. Cuba does not need anything but the privilege to enter into the ports of the United States and purchase arms and munitions of war. She needs no organized forces from here. She is able to maintain herself, and if she were not that is not our concern. It is sufficient for us that they have an organized government; that they maintain dominion over two-thirds of the island; that they confine the Spanish Government to the garrison towns upon the coast; that with all the powers of Spain at a distance of 3,000 miles it has been found impossible to subjugate the revolutionists. The President himself gives the reasons why. The reasons lie in the character of the country, in the fact that a guerrilla war can be maintained; that the people can disperse and avoid the armed expeditions that come out in force and harass them; that they can dear a Point did with Hamiltonian days of Point did with the Point did with the Hamiltonian days of the Point did with the Point did with the Ha do as Fabius did with Hannibal in the days of Rome-harass the armies, retreat, and reappear again until, wearied out, victory is accomplished. That is the character of the country, we are officially told. That is the reason why this war can not be terminated by the Spanish Government, and it is the reason why this Government, in recognizing the independence of Cuba, should say to Spain, "It is impossible for you to reestablish, whatever cruelities you may make the independence of the independence of Cuba, should say ties you may practice, your government upon the island at a distance of 3,000 miles."

The question which concerns us here as the Senate—a legislative body representing the United States—is not as to the character of the Spanish Government, or the history of Spain upon this continent, but it is as to the effect of the proposed action in the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside until the Senator from Florida concludes his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. CALL. I shall not occupy much of the time of the Senate,

Mr. President.

I maintain that wherever a people have organized a revolution beyond that of a riot, an insurrection, and have organized a gov-ernment which shows its power of maintaining itself by asserting its dominion and control of any considerable portion of the terri-tory of a state for any considerable period of time, they have a right to recognition as a government whether they shall ultimately succeed or not.

With what power can a government treat for the protection of the property and life of its citizens or subjects unless it be with that power which can protect them, which has subverted the legitimate and regular authority? If this be not true, it follows that they must remain unprotected, with nothing but the right of indemnity or damages against perhaps an irresponsible and failing power. How will Spain with her diminished resources ever be able to indemnify the people of the United States for the $50,000,000 of money invested in the estates and plantations of Cuba? How will Spain indemnify the people of the United States for the citizens of the United States transported to Ceuta and there for life sentenced to penal labor and confinement?

Mr. President, there seems to me to be no two sides to the question of the duty of the Government of the United States to recognize the independence of the Island of Cuba and its Government, and to accord to them all the rights that belong to an independent nation in the ports and jurisdiction of the United States. It is not a question for us to consider whether or not that will lead to war. I do not believe it will. It is a recognized right of not to war. I do not believe it will. It is a recognized right of nations to do this. There is no right on the part of Spain and no legitimate cause of offense. Really it is to her interest that the Government of the United States should take this action, and that in some form the war should be terminated without further ruin and further destruction of property, and without further excite-ment of the people of the United States by the continued imprison-ment of American citizens without sufficient cause.

ment of American citizens without sufficient cause.

So, Mr. President, I urge that the Committee on Foreign Relations shall at an early day report this proposed action, which will be sufficient to accomplish the purpose without going any further. Cuba has the power, she has the force, she has the heroic sentiment prevailing among her people, however uneducated, however ignorant. She presents a spectacle to the world of a people fighting without pay, without rations, without clothing—volunteers animated by patriotic principle alone. The people of that island, natives of Cuba, however ignorant, have shown a heroism which is equal to that of their Spanish ancestors generations gone by.

With these observations, Mr. President, I ask for the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, if there be no objection.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice of their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 3500) to authorize the adjustment and settlement of accounts of John Y. Williams; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 152) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to use Fort Bidwell for an Indian training school.

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a vote upon the committee amendment ment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. The amendment has been read, the Chair understands.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendment is simply in the nature of a substitute. It has been read.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to offer some amendments to the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Jersey desires to offer amendments to the committee's bill, but that can be done after we vote upon the committee amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that this entire question go over or be temporarily laid aside without prejudice until after the holiday recess. I make this suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts for what I conceive to be a most excellent reason. The report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, which has recently been placed upon the desk of each Senator and is not yet published in its entirety, will afford information which I opine will very materially determine the minds of Senators upon this question who have not had an opportunity to give it consideration, and to whom it will be impossible properly to present the question at the present time without the information thus afforded in the report.

I make the suggestion from a consideration of the further fact that there are several Senators who desire to be heard on the bill who are not now prepared, but who will be prepared at the time designated. Therefore I most earnestly ask the Senator from Massachusetts that he will accede to what I regard as a reasonable massachusetes that request after request for the request.

Mr. LODGE. I have acceded to request after request for the delay of the bill. The delay proposed, I conceive, would have the effect of ultimately defeating the bill. All the speeches to be made of which I had any knowledge were made upon the bill at the last session. At the request of the Senator from Maryland it was put over again and again, and finally I allowed it at his request to go over from one session to another.

The report of the Commissioner of Immigration is here. We have all had copies of it. It contains nothing directly affecting the bill beyond a strong argument from its statistics in its favor.

This is a very important measure. Both parties favored the restriction of immigration in their platforms. There is a great demand from all parts of the country for action on the bill.

I know of no opposition to the bill except that which emanates from the steamship lines directly interested in the carrying of immigrants. I have no desire in the world to do anything to affect adversely the business of the steamship lines running to and from the United States, but I think the question of immigration is far more important than the interests of a company engaged in any business.

The bill has been long before the country. It is an extremely moderate measure. It does not go nearly as far as go the demands in the many petitions which have come in. I am very desirous to get a vote upon the bill as soon as possible.

I have no wish to delay the Senate. I do not know of any further arguments that are to be made. There are a number of amendments which Senators desire to offer, and which can be offered after the substitution of the Senate bill for the House bill has been voted upon.

I feel it my duty, as it is the wish of a majority of the commit-tee, to press the bill to a vote at the earliest possible time. I do not wish to do anything in the least discourteous to any other Sen-ator, but I think that we have made every concession in the way of time that can reasonably be asked of us.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I differ very radically from the views of the Senator from Massachusetts with reference to the advisability of the passage of this bill. Nor do I regard from the same standpoint the report of the Commissioner of Immigration on this question. I think it will be observed by every Senator who has the opportunity carefully to read his recent report that he differs very widely from the views suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, and the recommendation in this hill of tor from Massachusetts, and the recommendation in this bill of the restriction of immigration. His suggestion is entirely the reverse. He says expressly in his report that the great danger, which the Senator from Massachusetts has so carefully and eloquently urged, to the institutions of this country from the overcrowded condition of the foreign population is the reverse, and that instead of there being an overcrowding of foreign immigration there is a decrease each year under the wise and healthful laws already provided upon our statute books of foreign immigration, and that to-day there are only 50 per cent of the foreign immigrants who came to this country since 1820 remaining; they have died or they have gone back to the country from whence

So far as having availed myself of the courtesy of the Senator from Massachusetts with reference to extending the consideration of the bill from the last session to the present is concerned, I am to-day first advised of it. I thank him, however, for the suggestion which he now makes. With reference to his courtesy for such extension, I had credited that fact to an entirely different

Be that as it may, however, Mr. President, I again urge that the request I made, if not acquiesced in by the Senator from Massachusetts, shall now be put in the shape of a motion, that the bill with the amendments proposed shall be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice, until after the holiday recess.

Mr. LODGE. I have read the report of the Commissioner of Immigration. That is all I desire to say. He suggests several pages of amendments and changes and improvements in the law which it would take weeks and months to perfect into a bill which it would take weeks and months to perfect into a bill.

The argument that I referred to when I said that he made the strongest argument in behalf of this bill was that if the bill had been a law 75,000 immigrants who have come to the country this year would not have entered. We all know there are a great many persons in this country to-day unemployed. We differ as to the reasons for that fact, but we all deplore it, and we certainly are not going to benefit the condition of those unemployed persons or to make their numbers any less by opening our gates without restriction, as we do, to the unemployed of all the rest of the world. I should like to ask if the motion is to postpone to a day certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that the motion made by the Senator from Maryland is not quite in The Chair understands that the motion to postpone must order. The Chair understands that the motion to postpone must be either indefinitely or to a day certain. The Chair would sug-gest to the Senator from Maryland that he modify his motion so as to move to postpone the bill to a day certain—say the first Monday in January. Then the motion would be in order. Mr. GIBSON. I will do so. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will then regard that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will then regard that motion as pending.

Mr. LODGE. The motion, I understand, is to postpone the bill until the first Monday in January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending motion.

Mr. LODGE. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire, before the yeas and nays are called, to subjoin to the remarks which I made a few moments ago with reference to the necessity for the restriction of immigration, that the States of this Union are not demanding the restriction suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. I know nothing of what may be the interests of the steamship companies. I do not what may be the interests of the steamship companies. I do not represent the steamship companies on the floor of the Senate.

Let their interests be what they may.

But what I do mean to say, Mr. President, is that one of the States of this Union, one of the most flourishing and prosperous States in the American Union to-day, the State which I have the honor in part to represent in the Senate of the United States, has in its history never more than now demanded that there shall not be the restrictions upon immigration which are sought in this measure, deeming even those which already exist as prejudicial to a very great extent to the interests of Maryland.

But in addition to what I have suggested, Maryland, by its last act of assembly, has added larger powers to its board of immigration, and sends abroad every year an agent at a salary of $5,000 or $10,000 a year to invite immigration to the State, which now has a population, I think, of 105 to the square mile.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—
Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, I desire simply to disclaim any idea that I suggested that the Senator from Maryland represented the steamship companies. All I said was that the opposition from outside—all the opposition I had heard of or could find—emanated from the steamship com-

I had heard of or could find—emanated from the steamship companies. I have not heard of it in any other quarter.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maryland to withdraw his motion to postpone. I do not think the Senator ought to begin to oppose this bill by dilatory motions. The motion he has made is a dilatory motion. The bill was postponed yesterday to accommodate the Senator's colleague. The Senator himself knows perfectly well what this bill is. He made an eloquent and elaborate speech against it during the recent session. The Senator knows that there is very little time before Congress between now and the 4th of March, and while I amglad to hear the arguments of the Senator, and glad to hear the argument he has just made against the bill, I think he ought to concur with the friends of the bill in expediting its consideration. the friends of the bill in expediting its consideration.

Let us have the debate which Senators choose to inflict upon the Senate, and let us have such amendments as Senators choose to offer; but let us go on with the bill and get it out of the way, in order that other important legislation may be considered.

I ask the Senator why he wishes to make a dilatory motion? I ask him in all kindness, and paying the tribute of my respect to the fidelity of the Senator to his public duty on all occasions, to withdraw his motion and not to get in the way of the decent and orderly consideration of this bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire asks me why I make a motion which, in his judgment, is dilatory in this connection. I do not agree with the Senator from dilatory in this connection. I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire in his suggestion as to a dilatory motion, so far as the proposition which I have submitted to the Senate is concerned. I regard as dilatory a motion made for no purpose except for the purposes of hindrance or delay. I am not filibustering. I have stated expressly that the request which I at first appealed to the Senator from Massachusetts to concede, and which I afterwards presented in the shape of a motion, which I will now make, to postpone to a day named, was not made for the purpose of delay, but was made for the purpose of securing time for an intelligent appreciation of the merits of this measure, which intelligent appreciation can only be had in the shape of information which comes from the source recognized by Congress as the proper one—the from the source recognized by Congress as the proper one—the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, and of his two associates who were on the commission to inquire into this subject, in favor of an intelligence qualification. They are in favor of this bill. *

Mr. GIBSON. That, I submit, is a question which must be passed upon by the Senate itself, and not to be accepted on the pse dixit of either the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not agree with the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire as to the report of the Commissioner-

General of Immigration

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, my point is that we want the Senate to pass upon it; we want the Senate to go right on and consider this bill; and when the Senator says we are going to get any further light on this subject to be given by the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, which has been brought into the Senate and is now being printed, he is not serious; he is jocose. The Senator knows as well as any other Senator here that we have all the information we want to pass upon this bill except such speeches as Senators choose to make. So, in all sincerity and good faith, I ask the Senator to withdraw

So, in all sincerity and good faith, I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion and let us go on with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Irepeat, Mr. President, that the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire as to the contents of the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration will not be borne out by the report itself, and it is an intelligent comprehension of that report which I ask, and which can only be had by other Senators, who have not had the same opportunities for information as the Senator from New Hampshire, who got the first of the advance conies of the report.

the advance copies of the report.

This report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration puts an entirely different light upon this question from that presented by the report of the committee as made by its chairman, the Senator from Massachusetts, and I have asked, not in the sense of being jocose, but in the sense of never being more serious in my life, upon a subject which demands the attention of the Senate of the United States, that the opportunity to do that which I ask shall be afforded.

I have added to that also, Mr. President, the further suggestion that there are Senators upon this floor who desire to be heard upon this question. Even if that request under ordinary circumstances should be sought to be denied, under the circumstances surrounding this case, where there is no necessity for haste, no necessity for the rapid course which is asked at the hands of the Senate at this time, I ask that this motion shall prevail. I therefore renew the motion to postpone to a day certain in January, when the Senate shall meet—I have not the Calendar before me, but will say after the holiday recess, the first Monday in January.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the report of the commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, consisting of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, Mr. Stump, from the Senator's own State; Dr. Senner, the commissioner at the port of New York, and Mr. McSweeney, secretary to the commissioners. Their report is dated October 7, 1895. Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me a moment for the purpose of requesting him to advise the Senate that the report from which he now reads is not the last report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not, Mr. President; but it is the expression of the opinion of Mr. Stump, Dr. Senner, and Mr. McSweeney on the 7th of October, 1895, in which they recommend in the conclusion of their report the adoption of the intelligence clause. They say nothing more than the ability of the immigrant to read and write in his native tongue should be required, and that such a requirement would exclude only such immigrants as are undesirable for other reasons, and conclude as follows:

There is no doubt that the introduction of the literary test would greatly facilitate the solution of the immigration problem, and do more than any one thing to lessen the present popular aversion to immigration.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

HERMAN STUMP, Chairman,
Dr. J. H. SENNER,
EDW. F. McSWEENEY, Secretary, Commissioners.

Here is a report which is not taken back in the current report; it is the opinion of those officers still, and the Senator from Mary-and has the gravity to ask that he may have time to familiarize himself with the last report—

Mr. GIBSON. No; not myself—

Mr. CHANDLER. With the last report of the CommissionerGeneral of Immigration not yet printed, which does not take any different ground from the previous report of October 7, 1895, when the Senator has not even read that report. We can not wait another year for the Senator to read this year's report, when he has not read last year's report.

has not read last year's report.

Mr. GIBSON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not catch the last remark which the Senator from New Hampshire made. Will he do me the kindness to repeat it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I said we could not wait a year for the Senator to read the report of this year, when he has not yet familiarized himself with the report of the commission made a year ago.

Mr. GIBSON. I will leave the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, with reference to that proposition, to other minds than his own. I have read the report from which the Senator from New Hampshire, with reference to that proposition, to other minds than his own.

ator quotes, but he seems not to have read the report to which I refer, although he is the first Senator in this body who had the benefit of an advance copy of it.

I submit, Mr. President, that the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, which I now hold in my hand, is essentially different from the report previously made, and the recommendations which he suggests as submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire have been discarded in the last report, and other recommendations made which the Senate has not yet had the benefit of information upon, and can not have without the report to which I refer.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator in all sincerity to read that portion of the report?

Mr. GIBSON. I will do so; that is what I was about to do.

Referring to these very recommendations made by the Committee on Immigration, the Commissioner-General of Immigration sug-gests primarily with reference to the illiteracy of the immigrants:

The illiterate immigrant, however, is not to be considered an undesirable accession to our population, since he often proves a more honest, industrious, and thrifty citizen than many who come equipped with money and an education.

Directly the reverse of the recommendations as suggested in the report of the Committee on Immigration, of which the Senator himself is a member.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, what I should like to have him read to the Senate is the part of the report where he thinks the Commissioner-General takes back the distinct recommendation of last year.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not take my language from that of the Mr. GIBSON. I do not take my language from that of the Senator from Massachusetts. I have not suggested that the Commissioner-General of Immigration recanted anything in the sense of "taking back," but he makes suggestions which, by a parity of reasoning with what I have suggested, mean not a recanting, but he suggests something different from what has been suggested before, and what, in his judgment, he regards as the latest and the best information on this important subject which he is so largely charged with disseminating.

I will gratify the Senator from Massachusetts in that connection—

Mr. LODGE. What I ask, if the Senator will pardon me, is that he should read the passage which I understood him to say reverses the verdict of those gentlemen of last year. Last year they recommended the illiteracy test as on the whole the best. Now I want the passage read where they say they no longer think so.

Mr. GIBSON. I have it, though I may not be able to turn my eye to it instantly, because I had no idea that this discussion would assume the phase which it has at this time. If such a proposition is not so demonstrable by one interested as I am it is certainly a strong object lesson with reference to what I have suggested about other Senators who have not had the opportunity to be interested in this question as I have. This is the language of the report:

The immigration laws have been found to work with reasonable satisfaction, but practical administration has demonstrated the necessity for amendments and additions which will add to their efficiency. For amendments suggested see page 17 of this report.

Among those suggestions made by the Commissioner-General Among those suggestions made by the Commissioner-General of Immigration as amendments to the already existing law not one word as to the illiteracy test is suggested following the line of the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. What I want is the passage in which the Commissioner-General takes back the distinct recommendation made last year with Dr. Senner and Mr. McSweeney.

Mr. GIBSON. I have referred to no passage in the report of the Commissioner-General whose the recenting or the taking back.

the Commissioner-General where the recanting or the taking back of anything had been suggested by the Commissioner-General.

Mr. LODGE. That is all I desire to have known.

Mr. GIBSON. But the report refers to suggestions made by him which he makes in the shape of amendments to the existing Nowhere in those suggestions have been found the recomaw. Nowhere in those suggestions have been found the recommendations of the Committee on Immigration, but, on the contrary, at the conclusion of those suggestions the Commissioner-General of Immigration expressly says in language specific, by way of a striking contrast, as I claim, to the report of this Committee on Immigration—what? By way of an express answer to the suggestion contained in this bill the Commissioner-General says:

The illiterate immigrant, however, is not to be considered an undesirable accession to our population.

Mr. LODGE. I think, if the Senator will read the passage as it stands, he will find it reads:

The illiterate immigrant, however, is not always to be considered an undesirable accession.

Mr. GIBSON. Did I not so read it?
Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator left out the word "always," Mr. GIBSON. Then I did not so intend. I did not propose to add to or take away a word from the report. I am sorry that the Senator from Massachusetts should have found it in his heart to make a suggestion which no course of conduct of mine in this connection, or ever before, has warranted. I have not misinter-preted nor misquoted, Mr. President. I would ask the indulgence

Mr. LODGE. I merely asked the Senator to read the language as it stood. He read "is not to be considered" when the report put in the word "always."

Mr. GIBSON. The Senate shall be the judge whether or not I have departed from the language of the Commissioner-General of Immigration. I read again:

The illiterate immigrant, however, is not always to be considered an undesirable accession to our population—

I think that is just the way I read it before-since he often proves a more honest, industrious, and thrifty citizen than many who come equipped with money and an education.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator now read to the Senate the two

Mr. Holde. With the Schattle flow read to the Schattle the two preceding paragraphs?

Mr. GIBSON. I will read the preceding paragraphs. The preceding paragraphs—if the Schattle from Massachusetts means that I shall be the source of enlightenment to the Schattle in this connection—contain a summary of the Commissioner-General's deductions from the administration of the laws already upon our statute books. He says in his report to the Secretary of the Treasury:

It is gratifying to me to be again able to report to you that I know of no immigrant landed in this country within the past year who is now a burden upon any public or private institution.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator kindly tell me from where he is reading? I asked him to be good enough to read to the Senate the two preceding paragraphs as to illiterate immigrants, which are as follows:

From the above table it appears that the education of the masses is neglected to the greatest extent in Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Russia, while the largest proportion of those who can read and write came from Switzerland, France, Denmark, Sweden, and Germany.

As exhibiting the close alliance that exists between ignorance and poverty, your attention is directed to the subjoined table of the nationality and number of immigrants who have been deported as liable to become public charges.

Mr. GIBSON. From what page of that report does the Senator from Massachusetts read?
Mr. LODGE. That is the one I wanted the Senator to read,

Mr. HODGE. That is the one I wanted the Senator to read, but it has been read now.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he desired to have read the preceding paragraphs to the one which I had before read, and I was proceeding to do so. I have respectfully asked of him the page of the report

Mr. LODGE. I said the two preceding paragraphs—the ones which I have just read.

Mr. GIBSON. As I understood the Senator from Massachusetts, I will proceed to read the preceding paragraphs to the one to which I have referred as the conclusion of the report of the Commissioner-General as to the illiteracy test as applied by this bill. I did not hear him say the two preceding, but the preceding paragraphs, and among those preceding paragraphs passing upon all of the laws which are upon our statute books, he says:

all of the laws which are upon our statute books, he says:

It is gratifying to me to be again able to report to you that I know of no immigrant landed in this country within the past year who is now a burden upon any public or private institution.

With some exceptions, the physical characteristics of the year's immigration were those of a hardy, sound, laboring class, accustomed, and apparently well able, to earn a livelihood wherever capable and industrious labor can secure employment. As to occupations, it was composed largely of the classes designated as "skilled and unskilled laborers," with some professionals. The amount of money brought into the country by immigrants was at least 4,917.318, and probably was largely in excess of these figures, since only those having less than $30 are required to disclose the exact amounts they have, respectively. Experience shows that it is safe, in estimating the full amount actually brought into the country, to multiply the foregoing figures three or four times, as in many instances immigrants reported as having "$30 or over" are possessed of considerable sums of money which they have saved up to invest in small business enterprises, or to buy land and build a home for their families in the New World.

Assuming that the tide of immigration to and emigration from a country corresponds to the fluctuations in the condition of its industries in exact harmony with the laws of supply and demand, a consideration of the foregoing tables does not justify the conclusion that our alien population is growing in undue proportion. A comparison of the figures for the past year (343,267) with the average annual immigration for the preceding ten fiscal years (435,085) discloses a decrease of 91,818, or over 21 per cent. Such data as I have been able to obtain as to the number of those who annually return to their own country, though approximate only, lead me to doubt seriously that there has been any material increase in our foreign-born population since 1893.

Regarding only the large number of arrivals, the public mind becomes much excited and urges restrictive legislation; but this apprehension would be lessened, if not entirely allayed, by a correct enumeration of those who depart never to return, and of those who come and go each year, engaging in work here during the busy season and returning to their own homes at other times, where they can live much more cheaply. In compliance with the public demand, measures have been presented and are now pending before Congress which will materially reduce the number and improve the character of aliens seeking homes in this country, and will tend to make the influx approximate in number the losses from death and the return of aliens to reestablish themselves in their native countries.

To show how erroneous impressions may be derived from correct figures, attention is directed to the perriod from 1880 to 1890, during which time 5,246,613 immigrants landed on these shores, but the United States census reports state the actual increase in our foreign-born population in 1890 over that of 1880 at but 2,569,604, or less than half the actual arrivals for the same period, the difference representing those who died and those who left for foreign countries.

In confirmation of the large proportion which according to the above figures remains here only temporarily may be adduced the data supplied me by the various transportation companies for the year 1895, showing that they brought to this country 328,246 steerage passengers and carried back 154,071, or about 50 per cent. All of the former passengers were not immigrants, for some were United States citizens; nor were the latter all returning aliens; but the figures are significant and show what is often lost sight of—that a very large deduction must be made from the actual arrivals to ascertain with any degree of accuracy how many become permanent residents of this country.

That is all I propose to read in gratification of the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts in this connection; and I now renew the motion which I made a few moments since, so that the opportunity which I have suggested for information as contained in this report may be intelligently passed upon by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland

moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Monday in January next, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Before the roll is called, I wish to make an inquiry. This is a motion, as I understand, to postpone to a day certain in January next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the first Monday in January

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. VEST. What is the amendment? Mr. LODGE. To substitute for the House bill the amendment reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to know whether the amendment reported by the committee is that printed in the bill?

Mr. LODGE. The amendment reported by the committee is a single amendment, to substitute the Senate amendment for the single amendment, to substitute the Senate amendment for the House bill. The substitute is printed in italics. I think it would expedite business if we should simply adopt the substitute, which will then be open to any amendments that Senators care to offer.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to move to amend the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Illinois that to the substitute proposed by the committee the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has already proposed the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has already proposed certain amendments, which are first in order. The Secretary will read the amendments proposed by the Senator from New Jersey. The SECRETARY. Mr. LODGE. Can we not have order while the Senator from New Jersey is making a statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will suspend for a moment. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from New Jersey will state his amendment again. The Secretary suggests that he already has an amendment noted to the same effect.

Mr. LODGE. What, may I ask, is the amendment pending to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary has already ated the amendment. Will the Senator from New Jersey stated the amendment. restate his amendment?

Mr. SEWELL. The amendments which I offer are on page 3, line 4, to insert after the word "All" the word "male;" so as to read: "All male persons."

Mr. CHANDLER. The mistake is that the Senator from New Jersey makes a new count in the lines. When he says line 4 he means line 7.

Mr. VEST. We can not hear anything on this side.

Mr. SEWELL. No; I mean line 4.
Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Jersey has a different print of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the committee amendment, the amendments which I have offered.

Senate substitute, shall be considered as adopted and then that these amendments shall be held to be in order after that, which would be a much more convenient course.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that these are vital questions.

Mr. HOAR. Because the whole thing may be voted down after the amendment is adopted.

Mr. LODGE. As I have said, the whole thing is open to amendment after the adoption of the committee substitute. Nobody's amendment of any kind is cut off, and it will simplify the matter very much if, instead of regarding it as an amendment to the amendment, we substitute the committee bill, and then amend

Mr. SEWELL. I have no objection to that course if it is a proper one.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that that course may be adopted. It will save trouble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Senate substitute shall be adopted and that it shall be open to amendment after it is adopted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from West Virgina is not now in order. It will be in order later.

Mr. ELKINS. I thought the committee were through. I wish to offer it to come in as an additional section.

Mr. LODGE. The amendments of the Senator from New Jer-

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey, as those amendments really all stand together, that I think by his last amendment in line 8, where he proposes to add the words "child or wife," he meets the point he desires to cover, and we can in that way get rid of the first amendment, to insert the word "male," which I think would give a more sweeping effect than the Senator intends. The committee would be very ready to accept the other amendments.

Mr. SEWELL. There are two other amendments.

Mr. SEWELL. One is, in line 7, to insert the words "or minor" after the word "aged."

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that amendment if the first one is withdrawn.

Mr. SEWELL. Another amendment is the insertion of the words "child or wife" after the word "grandparent." I will withdraw the first amendment if the Senator from Massachusetts will accept these two amendments. I withdraw the amendment proposing to insert the word "male," and ask that the other two amendments may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the first amendment is withdrawn. What course is suggested as to the other amendments?

Mr. SEWELL. The chairman of the committee, I understand, accepts them

Mr. SEWELL. Yes.

Mr. SEWELL. Yes.
Mr. VEST. I do not understand the Senator's statement. Does the Senator say that he withdrew the first amendment on condition that his other amendments shall be adopted?

Mr. SEWELL. The committee agrees to adopt the other amendments offered, which to my mind are very important to the bill as reported. Although I agreed to its being reported, I have since discovered that it would destroy the family relation to the extent even of excluding the wife of a man who is an admissible immigrant.

Mr. VEST. Let me put a question to the Senator: Does he not think he would separate man and wife if the husband could comply with the provisions of this bill and read five lines of the Constitution, and his wife could not?

Mr. SEWELL. I do not understand the Senator from Mis-

Mr. VEST. How could she enter as the bill stands now when it says "all persons?" The man could enter into the United States, but he would be compelled to leave his wife behind him.

Mr. SEWELL. My amendment, which the committee has agreed to accept, covers that point.

Mr. VEST. Which amendment covers it?

agreed to accept, covers that point.

Mr. VEST. Which amendment covers it?

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that the amendment be read.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as modified, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, and not as printed, covers it. The Senator from New Jersey proposes to insert the words "child or wife" instead of the words "or child," and that covers the point which the Senator from Missouri has raised.

Mr. DAVIS. In what line?
Mr. SEWELL. In the last line of the printed copy of my amendment, or in line 11 of the bill which the Senator from Min-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as

The Secretary read as follows:

All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country, or some other language, except that an aged or minor person not so able to read and write who is the parent, grandparent, child, or wife of an admissible immigrant may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it seems to me that this provision ought to be confined to male immigrants. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] in making the report from the committee gives as the basis for this legislation that the admission of illiterate immigrants debases our citizenship and degrades our labor. Now there are always number of reconstructions were the labor. Now, there are a large number of young women over the age of 14 years who come to the United States and who are engaged as domestics by the people of this country. Under the laws of the United States in regard to national suffrage they can not vote, and I take it that really at the bottom of this whole question is illiterate suffrage. I do not see how the workmanship or the labor of a man who can not read or write debases the labor or workmanship of anybody else. If he is an industrious, tem-perate, and honest workman, how does his employment degrade perate, and honest workman, how does his employment degrade any other labor in this country?

We might just as well be frank with each other in discussing this question. The great objection to illiterate immigration is that it corrupts our suffrage and endangers the basis of our Government, which is the virtue and intelligence of the people. Besides that, if we look at the tables just furnished this morning by the Cemmissioner of Immigration in his last report, it will be found that the number of women who come into this country as immigrants is very inconsiderable compared with the men who immigrants is very inconsiderable compared with the men who come as immigrants. There are two tables in this report which show the increase or decrease of male and female immigration during the years 1895 and 1896. Those tables will be found upon page 28 of the Commissioner's report. They show, for instance, that from Italy and Italy that the country which for research. that from Italy—and I take that as the country which figures most conspicuously in this whole question, because it is from Italy that there comes the most objectionable and the largest immigration—in 1895–1896 there came into the United States 49,980 male immigrants, and in the same year there came 16,465 women immigrants from the same country. The number of women is very inconsiderable, and their coming into this country can neither debase our citizenship nor degrade our labor.

I have said that Italy furnishes the most objectionable of these immigrants, and I call the attention of Senators to a very interesting table which I have just noticed on page 30 of this report. I have never seen the question put in so strong a light as it is by this table. For instance, from Italy there came into the United States in 1895-1896, 66,445 immigrants, of whom 30,728 were illiterstates and the amount of money which they brought into the United States per capita was $8.75. In immediate juxtaposition to that statement is the immigration of Germany, which stands out in the strongest contrast to that from Italy. From Germany there came into the United States in the same year 24,230 immigrants, and out of this large number there were but 410 illiterates. Each and out of this large number there were but 410 illiterates. Each one of those immigrants brought into the United States $38.31. Nothing could put in stronger light the difference in the immigration from these two countries. This might be pursued further, because it shows that from France there comes a very small proportion of illiterate immigration; but the amount of immigration from France is very inconsiderable compared with that from Germany

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that this provision ought to be confined to male immigrants. There can be no danger either to our civilization or to our labor from allowing these girls to come into the United States whose labor is domestic in its nature. can conceive of no reason except an arbitrary one why this provision should be extended to women.

I will renew the amendment which the Senator from New Jersey has withdrawn, so as to obtain the sense of the Senate upon it.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment to insert the word "male" will not prevail. It would create the very division of families which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] aims to correct by his amendment. Of course it is perfectly true, as the Senator from Missouri says, that the women do not affect the suffrage. I think they affect very largely the quality of citizenship in a somewhat broader way. But the point which seems to me to overrule all others in this consideration is what I alluded to a few moments ago when I was having a little discussion with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Gibson], and that is the great body of the unemployed in this country. We see varied estimates of the number of the unemployed. We differ as to the causes for there being so many. That there are a great many, no one questions. Every immigrant who comes into the country is some of the unemployed of other lands coming in here.

I will confess that I am very radical upon this question. I should be glad to see immigration stop until every man and woman seeking work in this country have employment. Women certainly work for low wages, and the lines of work for which they compete are overcrowded. I think that that which makes it desirable to exclude the meal immigrant makes it just as desirable to exclude the wealth of t exclude the male immigrant makes it just as desirable to exclude the female immigrant. The illiteracy test is simply an effort to adopt a test which shall restrict immigration, lower the number of immigrants coming to this country, and do it by shutting out the most undesirable class. That all persons who can not read and write are undesirable, no one will contend. No form of exclusion can be perfectly accurate, but it comes as near to it as any test. If Senators will take the trouble to read the very careful analysis made in the report of the committee they will, I think, find what I say on that point justified.

This test, if it had been applied during the last year, would have shut out 75,000 immigrants, according to the last report of the Commissioner of Immigration. That is sufficient argument for me. I do not see how it can be advisable to add constantly to the volume of the employed in this country in that direct way. It is simply taking in the unemployed of other countries.

That the bill is moderate in the view of persons most directly interested, is shown by the petitions which I have on my desk and which I will have printed with the remarks I am now making.

Here I have the resolutions of the Protective Labor Union of
New York, sent to me by J. E. Bausch, in which they say:

New York, sent to me by J. E. Bausch, in which they say:

Whereas it appears that not withstanding the prevailing stagnation of trade and industry, and the enforced idleness of over two millions of working people, alien immigrants are still flocking to our shores in great numbers; and Whereas the effect of the competition of these newly arrived aliens must surely be to inflict great hardship and misery upon our own working people by lowering the wages of some and by depriving others of employment altogether: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we recommend—
First. The passage of the Lodge-Corliss bill to restrict immigration.
Second. Additional legislation to limit the number of immigrants to 50,000 a year, and to establish a board for the distribution of immigrants, to consist of ten members, to be selected from the various labor organizations. The said board shall have power to distribute immigrants to localities that are not already overcrowded with laborers, and to prevent them from taking the places of striking workmen, or accepting less than current rate of wages, and to return all immigrants who fail to find employment within sixty days after their arrival to the country from whence they came.

Third. An amendment to the contract-labor law that will exclude actors, professional singers, musicians, and all others engaged in theatrical performances, coming here under contract.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, Washington, D. C.

Here is the resolution of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, with headquarters in Philadelphia. They demand the passage of a law "absolutely prohibiting all immigration of any kind, sex, character, or nationality whatever for the space of five years."

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 7, 1896.

PHILADELPHIA, P.A., December 7, 1896.

At the annual convention of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, held in the city of Streator, Ill., July 16, 1896, the following resolution was passed by the convention, and the general secretary of the association was ordered to send a copy of the same, under seal, to the President, Vice-President, Secretary of State, and members of both Houses of Congress:

Whereas it is evident to every intelligent observer that the development of our country is not keeping pace with the stream of immigration; and Whereas it is equally evident that every immigrant who lands upon our shores is a menace to the peace and prosperity of our people, occupying a space already overcrowded; and

Whereas none of the legislation proposed or enacted to correct this constantly growing evil has proven or will prove efficacious: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That we call upon our Representatives in Congress assembled to immediately enact a law absolutely prohibiting all immigration of any kind, sex, character, or nationality whatever for the space of five years.

General Secretary of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Association.

Resolution relative to the restriction of immigration.

Whereas the present immigration laws of the United States debar from landing on our shores only a few of those immigrants who are undesirable for admission to this country by reason of their ignorance, lower standards of living and morals, criminal tendencies, and anarchistic beliefs; and Whereas the large immigration of recent years has given rise to unhealthy competition in the labor market by the introduction of foreign workmen living under degraded conditions, incompatible with the standards of living of American workingmen; and

Whereas the immediate enactment by Congress of laws for the further restriction and stricter regulation of immigration is necessary for the preservation of our national character, institutions, and standards of living: Therefore,

Here I have also the resolutions of the Journeymen Tailors'

Union of Bloomington, Ill.

Now, Mr. President, I have read these lists and resolutions simply to show the Senate that the demand from the people who feel in to show the Senate that the demand from the people who feel in daily life this competition goes far beyond anything the pending bill proposes. The people gathered in our great cities without employment, who see a constant stream of the unemployed of other nations pouring in, know that that is one direct form of competition with them. They may differ as to other policies in other respects, as to the tariff and the currency questions, but there is no doubt that they are all united to-day in feeling that this unrestricted competition of the unemployed of other lands should be prevented. That it affects them, and affects them badly, no one can doubt. It is perfectly plain that if there are unemployed here and you pour in additional unemployed constantly, you add to the chance all the time that our own unemployed will remain as they are. That, to me, is the controlling reason for this legislation. That is That, to me, is the controlling reason for this legislation. That is why it makes no difference in my mind whether it be the competi-

why it makes no difference in my mind whether it be the competition with the labor of women or the competition with the labor of men. I think at this period we ought to do something to check it. On the question of the quality of citizenship I had the honor to submit to the Senate some time ago all that I thought it desirable to say on that most important point. But, Mr. President, I trust that the Senate, without delay, will deal with these amendments and will pass the bill, for with those of us who have examined it most closely I can assure you, sir, there is no doubt of the pressing need of such laws or the great benefit they will be. I trust that the amendment to insert the word "male" will not be adopted. I think the amendments of the Senator from New adopted. I think the amendments of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Sewell] cover all that it is necessary to cover in that regard, and I think that the insertion of the word "male" will merely take away from the force and scope of the bill, none will merely take away from the force and scope of the bill, none too great in my judgment at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I think if the Senator from Missouri will consider the facts and the purposes and the character of the bill as it stands, he will not feel inclined to insist upon his amendment. In the first place, the Senator will realize that the proportion of males to females among immigrants is not On the first page of the Commissioner's report so much greater. the Senator will find that for the present year the total immigra-tion was 343,267. "Two hundred and twelve thousand four hun-dred and sixty-six were males; 130,801 were females. There were dred and sixty-six were males; 130,801 were females. There were 130,000 females to 212,000 males, and in the previous year there were 109,520 females to 149,016 males. If there is an evil to be were 103,323 remaies to 143,016 maies. If there is an evil to be corrected by adopting an intelligence test for admission there is not such a difference between the number of males coming and the number of females coming as to justify the distinction which the Senator wishes to make by which illiterate males are to be kept out and illiterate females are to be admitted.

The Senator has assumed that the principal object in requiring that immigrants shall read and write their own language is in order that we may have intelligent voters in this Republic, and he assumes that that rule does not apply to women. I beg to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the cause of female suffrage is rapidly growing in this country, and that in the Western States at the recent election a vast number of votes of women was cast. at the recent election a vast number of votes of women was cast. Therefore, the distinction which the Senator is making, if it is a good one, is rapidly disappearing. If I were to have my choice as to requiring the absence of illiteracy from only one class, I would insist upon it that the women who come here, the girls of whom the Senator speaks, shall be compelled to learn to read and write before they come, and would allow the male citizens to come without that qualification.

Mr. President, this not a severe bill. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that it will not keep out anyone. Anybody can come who chooses, if he will only delay his coming until he learns to read and write his own language. It coming until he learns to read and write his own language. It only requires persons of suitable age and physically capable to learn to read and write, and a man or a woman or a child who wants to come here can simply delay coming long enough to learn the rudiments of education. I ask the Senator from Missouri if that is a very severe qualification. It will not make a difference of over three months in the coming of any human being otherwise motified to some Whysheveld not that the required of the formelos entitled to come. Why should not that be required of the females as well as the males who come?

as well as the males who come?

A man is not the tutor of his own children. It is the mother who teaches the children. The children of this country do not learn to read and write in the schools. They learn to read and the formula fireside. And who is the teacher? The mother. write by the family fireside. And who is the teacher? The mother. Where is the greatest danger from illiteracy in the families of this the father can read and write and the mother can not, the children will grow up in ignorance. But if the mother can read and write she teaches her children to read and write in the sanctity of her With this requirement as to the women who come here we may be sure that the little children who grow up in the families of the immigrants will learn to read and write, not because the laws of the country compel education, as the laws of many of the States do, but because through the pride and the love and affection of the alien mothers who come here their children will be affection of the alien mothers who come here their children will be taught the elements of education, which will make them good men and women, and which will make not the voters of this generation, perhaps, but the voters of the next generation, whether they be all males or whether they be males and females alike, intelligent and fit to exercise the suffrage in this Republic of ours.

Mr. President, I repeat that this is a very mild bill indeed, because it salve wires that person desiries to salve with the constraint.

cause it only requires that persons desiring to come to this country shall delay coming long enough to have every person who wants to come, every member of every family which is coming, qualified to read and write the English language, or the native language.

I understand that the national conventions of both political parties declared in favor of a restriction of immigration. If I am wrong, no one is so competent to correct me as the present occupant of the chair [Mr. Hill in the chair], who is thoroughly familiar with the platforms of all the various political parties which made nominations during the late canvass. [Larghter.] I am quite sure that the Republican party, which supported Mr. McKinley, and one of the parties that supported Mr. Bryan declared in emphatic language, in the interest of the labor of this country and the interest of the general welfare of the country, in favor of the restriction of immigration. I hope that the Senator from Missouri will not be the first to come into this Chamber and set the example of a violation by the great political parties represet the example of a violation by the great pointeal parties represented in this Chamber of the pledges of the platforms upon which they sought to obtain power over the people.

Mr. PASCO. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the language of the amendment as offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr Sewell] is very objectionable in many points; and I desire to call his attention and that of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Jersen and Jersen and nis attention and that of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who has charge of the bill, to it.

In the first place, there is an exception as to aged persons. That is in the language of the bill, however. Surely there ought to be something more definite than the word "aged." Some limit of age ought to be fixed, or something more definite ought to be stated in the bill, so that those who have control of the matter may know instructor the hourt county has been the sound to be a senator of the matter may know that the law to control of the matter may know that the law to control of the matter may know that the law to be sufficient or the law to be sufficient o just exactly how to apply the law.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Florida is now reading from the text of the bill as reported.

Mr. PASCO. That is the first objection I have to make. The Mr. PASCO. That is the first objection I have to make. The next covers a point which is included in the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. I understand that he adds after the words "or child" the words "or wife." That, taken in connection with the previous text, means a wife who is an aged person or a minor, and it would prevent the admission of a minor or a wife unless she were an aged person. Certainly the Senator from New Jersey can not intend to exclude wives unless they come under those two classes. under those two classe

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator that the object of the amendment is to let the wife in. She was excluded before.

Mr. PASCO. I understand the Senator proposes to add the words "or child or wife."

Mr. SEWELL. "Child or wife."

Mr. SEWELL, "Child or wife."

Mr. PASCO. That would mean a wife who is an aged person or a minor. I suggest that all that language be stricken out, in order to cover what the Senator from New Jersey desires and also what the Senator from Massachusetts is willing to concede.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will continue the reading he will find that the language is, "child or wife of an admissible immi-

Mr. PASCO. I am reading the amendment. The language will be as follows if the amendments are adopted:

All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language, except that an aged person or minor not so able to read and write who is the parent or grandparent or child or wife of an admissible immigrant may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

The person must be an aged wife or a minor, if that language is

Mr. CHANDLER. That is very clear.
Mr. PASCO. And we do not wish to exclude wives who are not aged persons, and minors. I suggest that the language read as follows after the word "except," in the ninth line:

All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language, except that the wife or parent or child of an admissible immigrant, not so able to read and write, may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Florida will pardon me, he should also include the case of grandparents; that is, if a grand-

Mr. HOAR. "Or grandchild."

 Mr. CHANDLER. "Of an admissible immigrant."
 Mr. PASCO. Yes; "of an admissible immigrant."
 Mr. CHANDLER. While the Senator is fixing that up, I will take occasion to call attention to the fact that as the amendment will then read, if there is a bright 10-year-old boy in a family that comes, that child's intelligence brings in all the rest of the illiterate members of the family, the father and mother, although they may be 25, 30, or 40 years of age. That certainly is not the Senator's intention.

Mr. PASCO. Does not that same objection exist to the text of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. By no means. But the criticism of the Senator as to the use of the word "aged" needs some attention. It is difficult to fix an age, and it is left open to be decided by the immigrant officer whether a person who is a parent or a grandammigrant officer whether a person who is a parent or a grand-parent is aged. A grandparent ordinarily would be too old to learn to read and write; a parent might not be; and the proposed statute simply says that he shall be an aged person. The original text, which I had the honor to report in the last Congress to the Senate as an exception under this head, is, it seems to me, the only safe text to adopt. Certainly you can not apply an illiteracy test which will let in an illiterate father and mother of 30 years of age because they happen to have a child of 12 who can read and write the native language.

Mr. PASCO. Does not the same objection exist to the text of the bill that the Senator calls attention to?

Mr. CHANDLER. As proposed by the committee, certainly not. It leaves the question who is an aged person open to the inspector of immigration.

Mr. PASCO. What does the Senator say with reference to the limitation of a wife to an old woman or a minor child?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is quite right in that criticism, and I am against that clause.

Mr. PASCO. I made the suggestion of a change of the text only because I thought it would cover those objections, which the Senator certainly can not wish to include in the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Florida read in connection with the text what he proposes?

Mr. PASCO. The text as I propose to amend it reads as follows:

All persons over 14 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country or some other language, except that the wife or parent or grandparent or child or grandchild of an admissible immigrant may accompany or be sent for by such immigrant.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator again if he is serious in advocating the proposition that if there is one bright child in a family he may bring in his father and mother and everyone

Mr. PASCO. I think that is an objection which should be obviated, but it is not an objection that I introduced into the amendment. It was there before I suggested any change. If the Senator from New Hampshire can suggest any words that can avoid that, let him make the suggestion instead of the criticism.

Mr. SEWELL. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Florida a question, if he pleases, Mr. President.

Mr. PASCO. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Under the language of the amendment, as I under-

Mr. VEST. Under the language of the amendment, as I understand him to read it now, would not a child 25 or 30 years old be sent for who could not read or write? Does a person cease to be a child of another person at any particular age?

Mr. PASCO. The Senator is still criticising the bill as it stood before I made the suggestion. That is an objection also to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. That can be easily remedied by inserting the word "minor" before the word "child," if that is desired.

Mr. VEST. That might be. The way it stands now the immigrant could send for any person in his family of any age.

Mr. PASCO. That was the language which was accepted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to inquire whether in any of the amendments proposed the words "over 14 years of age" have been altered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those words have not been altered.

Mr. LODGE. No; those words have not been changed.
Mr. PALMER. I move to strike out the words "over fourteen years of age" and insert the words "twenty-one years of Mr. LODGE. I believe the amendment now pending is the one offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the first amendment in order.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois seems to me a very objectionable one indeed. It appears to me to go far toward destroying the effect of the bill. A large proportion of the immigrants who come here are young men between the ages of 18 and 21. A large portion of the immigrants who come into the country and stay through the summer and go back to their native country at the end are of that age. I think it would be a great injury to the bill to have that limitation changed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question? Does not the State of Illinois provide for ask him a question? Does not the State of Illinois provide for compulsory education; and if so, at what age do the laws of Illinois propose to put into the schools of Illinois the boys and girls of that State to compel them to learn to read and write?

Mr. PALMER. They propose to put pupils in school at the age of 6, but they are admissible at any time under 21.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is provision for the compulsory education of the youth of Illinois?

Mr. PALMER. I understand that that is compulsory.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator, Why is it unreasonable, then, for us to require that children abroad who are about to come to this country shall spend two or three months in learning come to this country shall spend two or three months in learning to read and write their own language or the English language before they come instead of taking in all the illiterates up to 21 years of age and educating them here?

Mr. PALMER. The laws which fix the authority of the parents over their children are very much alike in all countries. The usual over their children are very much alike in all countries. The usual age of majority is 21 years. Until that age the children are under the control of their parents. It is easy to understand that in communities where the labor of children is necessary for the support or the assistance of the parents the education of a child of 14 may be considered as very imperfect. There is quite enough in the bill left to the discretion of the proper officers after the parents come left to the discretion of the proper officers after the parents come into the country. I know of instances in my own experience and observation where fathers have brought with them all their children. They have brought with them the children between the ages of 14 and 21. Now, to require that the sons should be sent back would be a case of very great hardship. It would necessitate the breaking up of families. I think the authority of the father should be so far recognized as that he might select his own time for the education of his children. As I said before, I know by observation and by information derived from other quarters that the labor of children abroad is very important and they are given the labor of children abroad is very important and they are given education gradually. There are not free schools in all countries.

I think the theory of the bill ought to be that as long as the au-think the theory of the bill ought to be that as long as the authority of the parents exists it shall be recognized. I therefore suggest that "all persons over 21 years of age who can not read and write the language of their native country," etc., is a better description of the persons who are intended to be excluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. If we could have a vote on the amendment of the Seater from Miscouri which is the rending amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which is the pending amendment, I should be glad, and then I will yield to the Senator from Ohio to make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that course, if there can be a vote taken.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—
Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me, that it will be necessary to have a short executive session. It will take but a few minutes. Mr. VEST. I will yield now for a motion for an executive ses-

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; I make that motion. I suppose nothing would be gained by continuing the legislative session longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spont in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 14, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Committee on the Territories recommended the following Strike out the word "inhabitant," where it appears in lines 5, 6, 15, 16, and 17, page 2, and line 15, page 5, and insert in lieu thereof the word "recident."

Strike out the words "who may have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in the manner provided by law" where they occur in lines 12, 13, and 14, page 2, of said bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to hear a portion of the bill as it was read. Reserving the right, if I can, to make the point of order, if I find that it is not subject to consideration in this hour, I should like to have an explanation from the gentleman in charge, whether this bill changes the laws relative to the acquisition of public lands by the citizen.

The SPEAKER. The point of order, the Chair understands, is reserved.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes.

Mr. CATRON. The bill makes no change whatever in the mode of disposing of the public lands of the United States and gives no right whatever to foreigners to acquire title to lands belonging to the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose, then, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is subject to consideration in this hour. I wanted to ascertain that, and there was one section of the bill that I was not able to hear Mr. McMILLIN.

distinctly

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some explanation of the provisions of this bill. It seems to me there is a good deal more in the subject than appears at first. And I especially want to call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell] to the provisions of the bill.

The Populist platform, Mr. Speaker, has time and again declared in opposition to the acquirement of lands in this country by aliens. The Territories, which, as I understand, are now clamoring for these changes proposed in this bill, have approved that platform at the last election. I should like to know what right a Delegate from one of these Territories, in view of the action of his people, has to make a modification of the laws that are now in harmony with the platform by his people approved? The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell] has been entirely silent upon this subject, and yet this bill, I undertake to say, does wipe out practically the provisions of the law as now existing—prohibiting alien ownership of lands in the Territories—for under the forms of foreclosure provided for in this bill the provisions of the present law are wiped out.

And so, under the terms of a seeming loan and a pretended foreclosure, the provisions of the laws as they now exist—prohibiting alien ownership—are to be absolutely subverted; and yet these gentlemen, who have gone about the country from year to year declaiming against alien ownership, insisting that that was year declaiming against alien ownership, insisting that that was one of the greatest evils the country suffers from, are now here acquiescing in undoing all that has been done heretofore. The gentleman now upon his feet, from one of the Territories, is acting in direct opposition, if he will permit me to say so, to the instructions of his people in the votes given at a recent election, sustaining this declaration of the Populist platform. I would like to have some explanation of the changes that have recently recovered that justify wining out this fundamental principle of the like to have some explanation of the changes that have recently occurred that justify wiping out this fundamental principle of the Populist party, that has been so generally approved heretofore, lately, in those Territories.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, I am not here as the representative of the Populist party, and hope never to be here in that capacity. The Populist party in the Territory of New Mexico is an insignificant factor. There is quite a factor out there known as the Democratic party, who did in this last election unite with the Populist party and gave a majority of 1,900 out of a total vote of 37,000 in that Territory against the Republican party, but not upon the issue that the gentleman has indicated in regard to this bill. On the contrary, every party in that Territory favors the passage of this bill, and in the platform of every one of the parties they indorse the absolute repeal of what is known as the antities they indorse the absolute repeal of what is known as the anti-alien bill, of which this bill is merely an amendment. The gen-tleman says this wipes it out entirely, by enabling them through means of mortgage to acquire property. If he will read this bill a little bit further he will discover that where the property is sold a little bit further he will discover that where the property is sold under a mortgage lien it is to be disposed of within ten years, and that the alien can not acquire the property. The object of this bill was to enable the people of the Territory to get some of the benefit of foreign capital which has been going to the various States that have refused to adopt legislation of this character, or who, after having adopted it, have repealed it. In the Territories of New Movice, trigone and Oldsham were repeated to the interval of the control who, after having adopted it, have repeated it. In the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma we can not get the investment of foreign capital to-day because no foreigner is entitled to hold possession or own real property; and this bill enables him to invest his means and to sell the property under a mortgage he may acquire. He may buy it in if he sees proper, but he can not hold it for a longer time than ten years, but must make a disposition of it. The fact that the Payalies postries have Mexico and sition of it. The fact that the Populist party in New Mexico numbers 500 or 600, or 1,000 or 1,200, has nothing to do with this bill, nothing more than it has to do with the gentleman's district in the State of Iowa; but the fact that we are American people, that we have a community who desire to progress, that we desire to obtain some of the means of Eastern capitalists, especially the cheap capital of Europe, is something that should induce Congress to see that we get the same benefits as anywhere else.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am very thankful to the gentleman for the admission he has made, that under the general law as it now exists a certain class of capital necessary to the development of those Territories can not be obtained; and yet in the face of that fact declared against permitting securities for a loan of that kind of capital. And I want to call the attention of the gentleman again to the fact that I have not misstated the proposition of this bill.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will state that every single platform adopted by any party in the Territory of New Mexico favored the passage of this bill.

Mr. HERDELDAY.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ah, while they were upholding Populism as understood in the rest of the United States and the people where I live understand it, these gentlemen were sneaking away from the effects of Populism by attempting to modify it in their platform in their own locality, yet they voted for the party. The gentle-man can not deny that we are having an object lesson of the effect of those declarations of the platform—that the declarations of the platform that they support are destructive to their welfare. I want them to learn that they can not grow under Populism, and I want them further to be taught that they can not modify the general doctrines of Populism as they are understood in the whole country by the adoption of a little resolution that they sneak into their local platform and then vote for the Populist party upon the general platform. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman that no such proposition has been "sneaked" into the Republican platform of New Mexico, and his assertion to that effect is with out foundation.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I understand that I am called upon especially to make objection to this bill. I do not know why, unless because it is presumed by some people that the Populist party is opposed to everything that is for the building up of any coun'ry.

A Member. That is about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. That may be so in some States, but it is not true in the State in which I live. We are opposed to the alien ownership of land—
Mr. HEPBURN. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir.
Mr. HEPBURN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to a clause in his party's platform:

The land, including all the natural sources of wealth, is the heritage of the people and should not be monopolized for speculative purposes, and alien ownership of land should be prohibited.

I called upon the gentleman as an advocate of that doctrine to be alert in the interest of his party to prevent the passage of this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMA. STONE. Will the gentleman from Colorado kindly give us a definition of Populism? I would like to have it authentically and accurately defined so that we may not misunderstand it hereafter. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It seems, Mr. Speaker, that some of our friends here care but little for this bill. Now, I want to say that the Populist party and, I believe, the masses of the people of the United States are in favor of holding the agricultural lands of the United States for the people of the United States, and if that doctrine is offensive to my friend from Iowa, then the Populist doctrine is offensive to him.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman misunderstands me. I intend to vote with him against this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I am glad to hear it. I am glad to know that the gentleman is a good Populist in that respect. [Laughter.] I was on the committee on platform which had this I am glad to identical proposition under consideration. The understanding of that committee was that the party favored the alien ownership that committee was that the party favored the alien ownership of such lands as might not interfere with the ordinary agricultural citizens of the United States. [Laughter.] That is, if a foreign corporation wants to come in and help to develop our unineral resources or our coal fields, or anything that the individual citizen can not go forth and develop—if a foreign corporation wants to come in and develop such property, and produce a product for itself, we are perfectly willing that it should do it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, as I understand your explanation, you believe in Populism in general, but do not desire to have it applied to your own locality? [Laughter.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. No, sir; that is not correct. I believe in Populism in general. I believe in the individual citizen. I do not believe in that kind of individualism which is taught by some of our men in high places, who talk of individualism and then do of our men in high places, who talk of individualism and then do everything in their power that tends to destroy individualism. We have heard individual development advocated, but the very men in high places who have advocated individual development have in the next breath advocated a corporate rule which destroys individualism. We Populists are opposed to that. We are opposed to this bill; and I am glad that my friend from Iowa called my attention to it, because I intend to oppose it. I oppose it not on the ground that aliens should not be permitted to help to develop such of our natural resources as individuals can not develop, but because the people of the entire West, and, in my opinion, the people of the whole United States, are opposed to the landlordism imported from European countries that is now being established in the Western States. We are opposed to that system getting any further hold in the Territories or elsewhere in this country.

Now, my friends, as I have been called upon to express my views of this bill, upon the suggestion that it is opposed to a part of the Populist platform, I want to say to you that the ordinary indi-vidual who has not lived in a State where Populism has prevailed is quite liable to misunderstand the Populist doctrine. He may not understand that a Populist believes in a government by the people and for the people, and that he does not believe in the destruction of government, as a great many of our friends upon this floor seem to think. I want to say to you that the Populists this floor seem to think. I want to say to you that the Populists of Colorado do not believe in disorder, do not believe in destruction, do not believe in anarchy; that the Populists of Nebraska and of Kansas do not believe in the doctrines that are often attributed to them in the plutocratic press. They believe in nothing of the kind, and when I am called upon in this case, as a Populist, to oppose this bill, I say that I do oppose it, and in doing so I oppose a bill that every Republican and every Democrat in the State of Colorado and, I believe, in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico is, in my opinion, opposed to.

I believe that our friends from Arizona and New Mexico who are advocating this bill are not in favor of the alien ownership of are advocating this bill are not in favor of the alien ownership of land generally, but are in favor of allowing foreigners to assist in developing our mineral resources where they can not be developed by ordinary individual effort. A poor man can not developed mine. A poor man can not own a mine and work it successfully, even though it may abound in minerals. And to that extent I believe the people of all these Territories are in favor of the foreign ownership of lands. And my friend from Arizona [Mr. Murphy] tells me that that is the only intent of this bill. If that were so—if the bill were limited to that—I would favor it. But I think the gentleman from Iowa is right in maintaining that this bill in its present scope practically opens the doors to the unlimited own. its present scope practically opens the doors to the unlimited ownership of lands in the Territories by aliens-a thing which should be discouraged. I am glad to take my position, unless I am shown be discouraged. I am glad to take my position, unless I am snown to be wrong, on the platform as the gentleman from I owa presents it to this House, and to say that the Populist party is unqualifiedly opposed to the policy of allowing alien ownership of land. But if the exception proposed to be made looks only to the development the exception proposed to be made looks only to the development of such resources as ordinary individuals can not develop—such as mining claims—then I am in favor of it. And that is the doctrine that the Populist party advocates generally—the doctrine that it advocated in the last election. So far as that party is concerned, I think it is generally understood where Populism is understood that we are in favor of all agricultural and pastoral lands being owned by citizens of the United States, and by them alone. Unless this bill is limited to mining claims or the development of resources that individuals can not develop I hope it will not pass.

that individuals can not develop I hope it will not pass.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, although it was not my intention originally to discuss this measure, yet, in view of the fact that the controversy has drifted far away from the main principle involved, it may become me perhaps, because of the interest taken by my constituents in this matter, to explain the measure as I understand it.

It is repeabled because the electric participant in the property of the proper measure as I understand it.

It is probably known to all gentlemen here that there exists on our statute books what is known as the antialien law, which prohibits the ownership of lands in the Territories of the United States except to a limited extent by aliens, and prohibits the ownership by foreigners of more than 20 per cent in any corporate body in this country. I wish to say that the workings of that act have been very injurious to the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, for reasons which I will state. Our Territories, as gentlemen know, comprise a large proportion of arid lands, so called—barren mountains, so called by our Eastern friends. It is a difficult matter to get capital to develop our arid lands and our mining resources, by the proper development of which there might be built up large and prosperous States. Our people are opposed to built up large and prosperous States. Our people are opposed to the alien ownership of large tracts of agricultural lands; but you charge upon us every day upon this floor and in committee that we charge upon us every day upon this floor and in committee that we have no large bodies of agricultural lands, and that therefore we are disqualified to govern ourselves. We claim that with a proper amount of capital applied to the work of development we shall have large bodies of lands as productive as those of any State. But the workings of this law are unjust and unfair to us in this particular: It applies only to the Territories; a great mass of agricultural lands in the States are not reached by it. While Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming were represented on this floor as Territories this House repealed the operations of that law as to those Territories. That bill was pending in the Senate when those Territories became States. Immediately they lost all interest in the ritories became States. Immediately they lost all interest in the measure, because it is not applicable to States. In this way injustice has been done to the remaining Territories. The development of our resources in Arizona and New Mexico is left uncared for, so to speak. I would like to have any man tell me where there is any justice in such a discrimination. Injustice of that kind is not Populism, is not Democracy, is not Republicanism. No man can assail my Republicanism. No man can assail the Republicanism of the Republicans of Arizona and New Mexico. If the Populists agree with us on that issue or any other individual issue, it is not a national question.

We come here defending our rights and interests as citizens of this country—I might say as aliens in this country, for you hold us down to-day as aliens, without allowing us to participate in your action through Representatives on this floor. We come to you now—not being States—not having any votes on this floor—not having any Senators at the other end of the Capitol—and we ask simply an opportunity to invite capital to investigate the resources of our localities and to expend money in their development. There is nothing else involved in this proposition. There is no great national issue here presented in regard to the propriety of allowing aliens to come in and absorb our public lands. The simple proposition is to allow us to invite aliens to invest their money for the development and the enriching of our section of the country this country-I might say as aliens in this country, for you hold the development and the enriching of our section of the country to allow them to take something which you gentlemen here pre-tend not to want. I ask the members on this floor to give us simple justice in this matter; to place our Territories on an equal footing with the States; to give foreign capital an opportunity to go there and develop and improve what you are generally pleased to call "our arid and nonproductive regions."

Mr. McEWAN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether section 2 of this bill does not confirm titles in aliens in cases where there are at present no legal titles?

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I do not understand that it does, Mr. McEWAN. Section 1 provides:

That no alien or person who is not a citizen of the United State shall acquire title or own any land in any of the Territories.

Section 2 provides:

This act shall not apply to land now owned in any of the Territories of the United States by aliens so long as it is held by the present owners.

That seems to me to be intended to confirm the title of those lands in persons who are aliens and who have not at the present time good titles.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. Even if it were as the gentleman aggests, there is nothing of that character involved. This is simply carrying out the intention of the law as it exists. But I am not prepared to say that that is the legal definition of the clause. I think perhaps the gentleman is mistaken in his construction of it.

Mr. McEWAN. Well, whether it is good or ill, it should not be accomplished by indirection. If it is to be done at all, let it be done in a proper manner and in a straightforward way.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I repeat that I am not prepared to affirm that it is done even by indirection.

Mr. McEWAN. If that is the purpose of the bill, it should be so stated in the bill and in the report accompanying it. It seems to me, therefore, that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] was entirely right in saying that we ought to look very carefully into this bill before passing it. If it is intended to confirm the title in these people, it should be so stated plainly, in order that we may know exactly what we are doing, and the discussion should then proceed on that line.

Mr. CATRON. The old law confirmed the title of all these owners.

Mr. McEWAN. I will ask the gentleman whether section 2 is not an essential feature of the bill, and whether it does not change the existing law?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It does confirm title.

Mr. McEWAN. I am informed that it does confirm title, just as I have suggested, and that being the case, this proposition is against the whole spirit of the law heretofore enacted. Now, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, let the discussion take the course along that line, so that we may understand clearly what we are doing. We will then be able to know precisely what will be the effect of the legislation we are about to enact. But that is not indicated in any shape either in the bill or the report which has been presented by Mr. CATRON. I will state to the gentleman that this provi-sion does not change the law as it existed in the old law as amended. The old law did precisely what that section provided for, and this act substitutes the new provision for the old law. It has no other effect. The gentleman is entirely wrong in his construction of it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it not confirm every title secured by aliens since the passage of the other act?

Mr. CATRON. No alien could acquire title under that act.

Mr. HEPBURN. He could not acquire a bona fide title, it is true, under the provisions of that act, but in connection with the provisions of this act which we are now called upon to pass it could be acquired and made a perfect title.

Mr. CATRON. Well, out in New Mexico not a single one has

Mr. HEPBURN. Possibly not.

But the gentlemanfrom New Jersey, let me say, might have carried his criticism of this section of the bill a little further. Let me read where he ceased to read:

Nor to any alien who shall become a bona fide resident of the United States, and any alien who shall become a bona fide resident of the United States, or shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States in the manner provided by law, shall have the right to acquire and hold lands in either of the Territories of the United States upon the same terms as citizens of the United States: Provided, Thatif any such resident alien cease to be a bona fide resident of the United States, then such alien shall have ten years from the time he ceases to be such bona fide resident in which to alienate such lands. This act shall not be construed to prevent any persons not citizens of the United State from acquiring or holding lots or parcels of lands in any incorporated or platted city, town, or village, or in any mine or mining claim in any of the Territories of the United States.

Now, practically, I repeat, this law wipes out every feature that is valuable in the law as it now exists, and makes provision that an alien can, not only in the way suggested, but through foreclosure proceedings, acquire title; and if he be a speculator, if he chooses to engage in a manufactured case of foreclosure, he can secure a title that he can hold for years, or quite as long as anyone wants to hold Western lands for speculative purposes. Therefore, if we are to wipe out the old legislation upon this subject, and if these people in the Territories are now ready to declare against the platforms which they supported and voted for within the last two months, why that is all right; let them do so.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa if his difficulty is that this bill is not consistent with the Populist platform; and whether he proposes to keep the Populists consistent with their platform by law? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I think perhaps that is about the only way it can be done, but I am not engaged in that enterprise just now.

[Laughter.] I am trying to show those people who voted the Populist ticket at the last election that they were mistaken, that they did not want the doctrines of that platform, that those doctrines are harmful to them, that they are absolutely destructive to the interests of those Territories, and that they can not by any possibility develop them in the manner that they want to, within the limita-tions of this generation, under those doctrines. That is what I want to do.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not apply to the Territory which I have the honor to represent. It comes here with the unanimous report of the Committee on Territories. I want to submit to this House in this connection one question, and that is,

Why should not the same law that governs a State with reference to the ownership of real estate also govern a Territory?

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] in the question which he propounded to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hep-BURN] solved the problem in my mind. If you desire prosperity, advancement, and development to be retarded in the Territories, this law should remain on the statute books. My judgment is that the Populist party never advocated a more nonsensical plat-form than the clause concerning this subject. I do not agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bell] in his definition of Populism. I have had some experience with it very recently. [Laughter.] If I were to define what Populism is, I would say that not the rank and file, but the guiding stars of that party are Ishmaelites, with their hands raised against every man who by honest toil and labor seeks to accumulate a competency for himself and his family in the future. Populism can not prosper where and his family in the future. Populism can not prosper where there are development and success. Find a barren region where nothing but a buzzard can thrive—and a buzzard can thrive on nothing that is about to be alive, it must be decaying, leaving nothing but the bones—find such a region as that, and there, my friends, you will find the Populist party in control. I say that where peace and prosperity abound the Populist party can find no section place. resting place.

The rank and file of that party are honest. The party was made respectable by the addition of some clauses added to it by some other parties in the recent campaign. Men who know betsome other parties in the recent campaign. Men who know better, men who own property, men who are interested in the success and development of this country, for the purpose of striking down the party which had built up American institutions and American industries, shook hands with Populism in order to try to give this nation of ours a black eye.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me right here to ask him a question?

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do I understand that the definition of Populism is different in each State and Territory, and in each Congressional district, and that in no two States or localities do they agree as to what Populism is 2 do they agree as to what Populism is?

Mr. FLYNN. I am inclined to think my friend is about right.

With us Populism is anything to win. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There was some discussion between a gentleman by the name of Watson, who had something to do with Populism, and another gentleman by the name of BUTLER, in the last summer, which has mixed me very much as to just what the last summer, which has mixed me very much as to just what Populism is. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLYNN. That calls to my mind, Mr. Speaker, a definition of Populism which was circulated, not in my district, but in an adjoining one, when the late Vice-Presidential candidate on the Populist ticket, Mr. Watson, was starring the country. I hold in my hand a handbill which was printed and circulated, advising the people to come out and hear him, and giving the reasons for it. I think it contains a good definition of what Watson and Populism stand for. I will ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Tom Watson, Populist candidate for Vice-President, will address the people at the depot in Baxter Springs, Kans., Saturday evening, October 11, at 6.45 p. m. Leading Populists will accompany him. He comes with special train on Pullman palace coach, with dining car, glee clubs, and brass band. Every Populist should turn out and hear Populism discussed from a simon-pure Populistic standpoint.

Tom Watson is the only Populist on the national ticket. He is the only candidate in sympathy with the toiling masses. He is the only candidate not under the influence of the plutocrats, trusts, combines, and humbugs. Tom Watson is the farmers' friend and favors subtreasuries, Government ownership of railroads, stay laws, public warehouses, greenbacks, free silver, free trade, free riot, and the Ocala platform.

Tom Watson is the enemy of plutocracy and opposed to corporations, supreme courts, Federal soldiers, syndicates, sound money, robber tariffs, money loaners, and all stall-fed gold-standard sap suckers.

Tom Watson is the only legitimate nominee of the Populist national convention and the only man entitled to the Populist vote of the State of Kansas. Tom Watson is the only real orator and statesman on the ticket. Turn out and hear him orate.

Democratic decoy-ducks, Republican rooters, and Populist hoboes owned by Sewall, the millionaire plutocrat, are especially invited.

BY ORDER COMMITTEE.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Will the gentleman allow me to ask

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Do you not know as a matter of fact that that literature was got out by Paul Vanderveer, who was in the employ of the Republican party and was employed by the Pacific Railroad Company? Do you not know that that was charged in our Populist papers, and that the Populists repudiated that circular? Do you not know that as a fact?

Mr. FLYNN. Are you ready now for me to answer?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. FLYNN. I never heard of Mr. Vanderveer, and am here to say that I do know the man who got out this handbill.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Was he not in the interest of the Vanderveer.

Mr. FLYNN. No, he was not. I want to say further that the Populists took great pride and delight in the circulation of that handbill as enunciating their principles.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Did Mr. Watson appear on that occasion?

Mr. FLYNN. He was fortunately, I understand, taken ill.

[Laughter.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Do you not know as a matter of fact that the Populist party in the State of Nebraska, through its organization, repudiated Mr. Vanderveer?

Mr. FLYNN. Who is Vanderveer? I never heard of him.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. He was the man bringing forth this literature. He had this car, and it was claimed he had it from the Pacific Railroad Company; and the was claimed he had it from the Pacific Railroad Company; and these men were employed at the expense of the Republican party.

Mr. FLYNN. Are you through with your question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma yielded for a

Mr. FLYNN. I yielded for a question, and desire to be courteous to the late Populist candidate for Speaker of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I am obliged for that.
Mr. FLYNN. I would like to have a question and not a speech.
Mr. BELL of Colorado. Well, will you now let me ask you a

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.
Mr. BELL of Colorado. May I state a fact? [Great laughter.]
Mr. FLYNN. I decline to yield further, for the simple reason that it is utterly impossible to get at the facts from a Populist standpoint. [Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman yield to me

Mr. FLYNN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. BELL of Colorado. Will you let me get through with the

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma has yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BELL of Colorado (to Mr. FLYNN). Do you decline to yield to me?

Mr. FLYNN. You were trying to state a Populist fact.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Then you want no more?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the Populist party had undertaken to do something that they have never done before, namely, state a fact, I hope the gentleman will yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLYNN. I merely want to say that that is not a question.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he will permit me—

Mr. FLYNN. Not to state a fact.

Mr. FLYNN. Solorado (continuing). To ask him a question.

Mr. FLYNN. Not to state a fact.
Mr. BELL of Colorado (continuing). To ask him a question.

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.
Mr. BELL of Colorado. Do you know, or do you not know [laughter], that Mr. Vanderveer was in charge of these meetings published in this circular?

Mr. FLYNN. I do not.
Mr. BELL of Colorado. Then allow me to ask you if it is not a fact that Mr. Watson never appeared in answer to any of these publications of these meetings?

Mr. FLYNN. I understand, Mr. Speaker, from the public press that the executive committee in charge of Mr. Watson deemed it that the executive committee in charge of Mr. Watson deemed it to be inadvisable for him to appear.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. May I ask you another question?

Mr. FLYNN. Call the limit—how many?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes; I want to get you right, if you want to be right. I was present in that part of the country and know something of these meetings. I want to ask you this—if these meeting were had under the auspices of a class of men that called themselves "middle-of-the-road Populists," and were against the regular Populist organization?

called themselves "middle-of-the-road Populists," and were against the regular Populist organization?

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this—that the only honest Populist is the "middle-of-the-road Populist." The only men in the Populist party who have set principle above office are the "middle-of-the-road Populists."

Mr. BELL of Colorado. In whose employ were they?

Mr. FLYNN. The leaders, who wanted office, were ready on head on all eccessions to trade out the honest reals and file of the hand on all occasions to trade out the honest rank and file of the Populist party. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BELL of Colorado. May I ask you another question?
Mr. FLYNN. I want to say to this House if you desire— Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to call the attention of the gentle-man from Oklahoma to the fact that there seems to be some confusion about what is Populism and what is not; and inasmuch as I believe in getting information on a point like that from the highest authority, and seeing present here a gentleman who was at the birth of the Populist party at Ocala—I believe its birth-place was Ocala—I would like to know if the gentleman would not be willing to give way to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingsron]? [Great laughter.]

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to give way at this time. I want to say to the House, in all seriousness, that if you desire prosperity in the Territories and in the Western States you must prosperity in the Territories and in the Western States you must give those people an opportunity to develop their resources. That is all, as I understand it, that this bill asks for. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Territories and it ought to pass. Why should not a man, whether his citizenship is here or elsewhere, have a right to purchase real estate in Arizona or New Mexico, as well as in the State of New York or any cona or New Mexico, as well as in the State of New York or any other State? If you want to eradicate Populism, allow the light of prosperity to shine upon those portions of the country, and the passage of this bill will be a step in that direction. In all seriousness, I hope the House will consider the question from that point of view. I believe this is proper legislation. I believe that the plank in our platform that has been referred to here which would insist upon debarring others than American citizens from the provided of property and helding real extent in our Territoria. privilege of purchasing and holding real estate in our Territories, if they desire to do so, is a plank stolen bodily from the Populist platform, and that we have no right to claim it as ours.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman permit a question about the

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.
Mr. QUIGG. I wish the gentleman would state his own theory of what the real purpose of this bill is. It is entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate by aliens," but, as I read it, it seems to be an act to confirm the titles of aliens.
Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman evidently did not understand the explanation of the bill made by the gentleman from New Mexico a while ago.

Mr. QUIGG. No; I did not understand the gentleman, although I listened to him.

Mr. FLYNN. I will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico to explain the matter for the benefit of the gentleman from New

Mr. CATRON. I think if the gentleman will look more attentively he will find that this bill is an amendment to a prior act restricting the ownership of real estate by aliens. The original bill, which was passed in 1887, absolutely prohibited foreigners from acquiring or owning or holding real estate in the Territories, and the purpose of this bill is to modify the provisions of that act so that foreigners, when they are bona fide residents of the Territory, may acquire real estate and hold it during the time of their residence there and be allowed ten years after they leave the their residence there and be allowed ten years after they leave the Territory in which to dispose of their real estate. This bill also permits the foreigner to invest his money, by way of a loan secured on real estate, and if the property has to be sold under the mortgage and the lender buys it in, he is allowed ten years in which to dispose of it. Unless he remains a permanent resident of the Territory he can not hold real estate permanently, but if he goes away he is allowed ten years within which to sell it. The law of 1887 contained no such provision, and this bill modifies it in that respect. This is practically an invitation to foreign capitalists to contained no such provision, and this bill modifies it in that respect. This is practically an invitation to foreign capitalists to come into our Territories and develop their resources, so that we may progress. Some gentlemen here seem to think that we ought to be denied this legislation because we did not vote the Republican ticket at the last election. I would like to ask them this question: If we had voted the Republican ticket at that election would that fact have been a good argument in favor of this bill? I repeat, the object of this bill is to advance the prosperity of the Territories and develop their resources.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to treat my colleague, the late Populist candidate for Speaker, fairly. I may not have stated fully all that he thinks ought to be stated with reference to the Populist party, but I will endeavor to make up for the omission. I am requested to have read from the Washington Post of this morning a letter from Mr. Watson to Mr. BUTLER. I have not read the letter myself, but as both those gentlemen have been regarded generally as high Populist authorities, I will ask the Clerk to read it now.

Clerk to read it now.

The Clerk proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that it is unparliamentary to Speaker, I make the point of order that it is unparliamentary to have read here an attack on a member of another body who can not defend himself here. I am not a member of the Populist party, but I do not think it is proper to have read on this floor an attack upon a member of the Senate, a coordinate branch of Congress. It seems to me that it is mighty poor taste to have that letter read here, and besides I believe it is out of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the article does not refer to the duties of the gentleman as Senator, or to his action in that capacity, but only to his action as an individual.

The SPEAKER. No. It does not refer, either, to the bill under discussion. [Laughter.] The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. FLYNN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had not read the letter. I was merely endeavoring, in as brief and pointed a way as possible, to show what Populism really is, and I have nothing further to say on that point. I trust, however, that the House will consider favorably the pending bill, which the Committee on Territories has recommended, and will enact it into law.

Mr. SCRANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the committee were adopted. The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, there were—ayes 60, noes 73.

Mr. SCRANTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, only eight members voting therefor; so the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call. have read here an attack on a member of another body who can INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE CAPITOL.

Mr. MORSE (when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called). I call up the bill (H.R. 7083) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to sell, dispense, or otherwise dispose of intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any compound or preparation thereof, either in the Capitol building in the District of Columbia, or upon any part of the public grounds upon which said building is situate.

SEC. 2. That any violation of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall, for each separate offense, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add as a new section the following: "Sec. 3. That the courts of the District of Columbia exercising criminal jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction of all violations of this act."

Mr. MORSE. I ask for the reading of the report. The report (by Mr. MORSE) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MORSE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7983) entitled "A bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating drinks in the National Capitol," have had it under consideration, and respectfully report the same with the recommendation that it do pass, with an additional section as hereafter stated.

Your committee are of the opinion that the sale of intoxicating drinks in the restaurant or restaurants of the National Capitol is unseemly, unsuitable, and gives offense to a large and respectable number of the citizens of the United States, and is a just cause of public scandal. Your committee are of the opinion that the sale of intoxicating drinks in the National Capitol should be entirely prohibited, and do therefore recommend that the bill pass, with the following additional section:

"SEC. 3. That the courts of the District of Columbia exercising criminal jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction of all violations of this act."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

mized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to discuss this bill at any length. It is self-explanatory. Suffice it to say that the sale of strong drink in the national Capitol gives offense to a large and growing number of the citizens of this great Republic. The saloon in the Capitol is a cause of public scandal. Thousands—yes, millions—of our citizens regard the saloon as the enemy of God and man, as the awful maelstrom and whirlpool that destroys the body and soul. The saloon is responsible for a large percentage of the neuperism crime and insentity and a large percent age of the pauperism, crime, and insanity and a large amount of the taxation of the country. Mr. Speaker, there is at this very hour assembled in this city a convention of the National Anti-Saloon League. The delegates are from every section of our country. I believe they are as august and honorable a body of earnest men believe they are as august and honorable a body of earnest men and women as ever assembled in this city. They have uttered protest loud and long against what they term this national disgrace, and I believe it is therefore an opportune time to pass this bill while this great convention is in session. The passage of this bill will give joy and satisfaction to thousands—yes, millions—of our countrymen and countrywomen. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that great sisterhood that spans the continent and the world, has lifted up its voice in petition and in protest against this national disgrace, and let me tell the Democratic and Republican parties in this House that they can spike a Populist gun by passing this bill. Their speakers on the stump and their literature have much to say, and much that is not true, about the sale of intoxicants in this Capitol building and the personal habits of the members. Some members of the House who themselves use intoxicants to some extent have expressed to me the belief that a intoxicants to some extent have expressed to me the belief that a saloon in the Capitol is unseemly and improper, and I trust they will vote with us for the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, my observation is that these bars are patronized

Mr. Speaker, my observation is that these bars are patronized very little by members of Congress; and my observation, Mr. Speaker, is, during the eight years I have been here, that for character, integrity, virtue, and sobriety, the 357 men who compose this House will compare favorably with the same number of men in any spot or place on the face of God's green earth. The members of this House have been charged, for political purposes, with insobriety and drunkenness. It is a vile slander. During the eight years I have been here I have seen but one intoxicated member of Congress. The patrons of this bar are largely and principally outsiders and employees of the House; colored men have frequently been seen drinking at the House restaurant; "there is no distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude"—any man who has the money can have the drink. We owe it to these people, especially the employees of this House, to remove this temptation, and to my mind that is another strong reason why this bill should pass.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time, and

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time, and I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] who introduced the bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman propose to call the previous question?

Mr. MORSE. I have not moved the previous question; but I propose to do so after the remarks of the gentleman from Arkan-I do not wish to cut him off.

Mr. LITTLE. I am perfectly willing that the previous question be called now. I do not desire to be heard unless there should be some opposition to the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken, the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to. mittee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill,

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it.

Mr. FOOTE. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 104, noes 7.

So the bill was passed.

So the bill was passed.
On motion of Mr. MORSE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The call of committees proceeded.

Mr. POWERS (when the Committee on Pacific Railroads was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 6398) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871. If I can have the ear of the House a moment, I should like to make a statement.

Mr. POWERS. Before the bill is read I should like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was inadvertently referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It should have gone to the House Calendar. There is no appropriation in it whatever. I ask that the bill be considered as if on the House Calendar.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the bill first be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company is made by virtue of any mortgage or other power authorized by act of Congress, the purchasers at such sale, and their associates or assigns, shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1886, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, not exceeding the amounts which the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company by said acts was authorized to issue, and with like effect, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale; but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

"That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company under and by virtue of acts of Congress is foreclosed in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property covered by said mortgage is made under a decree or decrees of such courts, the purchaser at any such sale or sales, and their associates or assigns, shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, which were owned and possessed by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or said mortgagees at the time of such decree of foreclosure; and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation hereunder, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale; but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale: Provided, That the amount of the proposed issue of stock of such new corporation shall not exceed the aggregate amount which the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, corporation may is

Mr. McRAE. I make the point of order that this bill— Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to know whether the bill in any way involves the interests of the United States. If it does, it can not come up under this order of business except by unanimous

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to reserve a point of order until I can examine the measure.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. McRAE. I rose for the purpose of making this point of order: That this bill can not be considered during the morning hour. I wish to state my reasons for making that point. The bill proposes an extension of an expired charter, and it involves the yielding by the United States to these corporators of rights which they have not now, and which, I think, we ought not to

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I think that if the gentleman from Arkansas will reserve his point until the report of the committee has been read, he will discover that he is in error in the position which he takes. The whole object of this bill is, to all practical intents and purposes, simply to amend the original charter of this company. When this company was chartered in 1871 Congress provided that it might issue a mortgage; and the language of the act would seem to a layman to be broad enough to cover the mortgages in the event that they succeeded to the rights of the original company, and would give them the right to be a corporation. The language of the enabling act is:

And to secure said bonds said company may mortgage its road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights.

Under that language, as I have already stated, it would seem to a layman that the right to be a corporation was a franchise covered by this section of the enabling act of 1871.

But, Mr. Speaker, later on the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case reported in 112 United States Reports, and in another reported in 114 Reports, have held that the word "franchise" is not broad enough in its scope to enable the mortgage bondholders, in the event of a reorganization, to organize themselves into a new corporation. And the only purpose of this act is simply to settle that controversy. The mortgage was issued, the bonds were sold, the moneys advanced, and the road was built. Now, the mortgage then issued has been foreclosed, and it transpires in the light of the two decisions to which I have referred spires in the light of the two decisions to which I have referred that the mortgagees are unable, technically speaking, to exercise the right of a corporation, or to be a corporation.

It would seem, therefore, and did so seem to the committee, that a technical objection of this kind ought to be remedied by legislation, and that is the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, if this bill is not intended to grant or revive a charter which was first granted to the corporation now alleged to be extinct, then I do not understand why it is presented. The act of Congress which granted the charter to the original incorporators should be subject to the point of order, and this bill is also. The authority to mortgage primarily fixed a lien upon and finally passed from the United States the title of the largest land grant that was ever made by the Congress of the United States without any substantial compliance with the provisions of the grant, and this bill will have the effect to confirm a questionable title—it yields all the rights of the United States.

There is an immense grant of public lands behind this old company. The mortgagees and purchasers are in no condition to ask the relief proposed. It is to legalize the acts and create the successor to a defined convertige that failed to heild the read for cessor to a defunct corporation that failed to build the road for which the grant was made and which has not kept faith with the Government in a single particular. If the corporation is dead we should not resurrect or revive it.

should not resurrect or revive it.

The history of this grant, when correctly understood, is the most corrupt of any among the long list of grants of lands by the Congress of the United States to railroad companies. Now, these purchasers, who I think are the mortgagees, seek to continue the official life of the old company notwithstanding the forfeiture, and to secure the advantages and privileges which accrue under the original grant to the grantee company. It gives to them a right which they have not now. It gives them a right which in justice they ought not to have. It gives them a right to secure valid title to lands that they never properly earned, that did not fairly belong to the road, a title which belongs of right to the Government of the United States, and which should be held by it instead of giving it away in this manner. I insist that the bill should be considered in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas overlooks the proviso of the bill, which reads:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making any additional grant of lands or other franchises to such successor corporation, or as a waiver of any rights of the United States now existing to enforce any forfeiture of lands heretofore granted to the said Alantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or of any purchaser or purchasers of said lands from said company.

Now, all of these rights are reserved to the United States under . All rights are withheld from the corporation that can possibly be reserved for the Government. If the gentleman makes objection to the grant of the land to the company originally, he is hurting the matter not at all by depriving these men of the chance of organizing themselves into a corporation. They foreclosed the mortgage; they had possession of the land, and if you do not let them hold them as a corporation they will hold them as tenants in common—as mortgagees. What better, then, are you off than if common—as mortgagees. What better, then, are you off than if you pass the bill? The objection of my friend is merely a technical one, and should not interfere with the organization of the company.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont a question for information. As I understand it, this grant was made to the corporation, and the corporation was formed, the road built, the mortgage executed, default followed, and for-feiture ensued; sale followed that and the title is in the vendee. Now, as I understand the object of the gentleman from Vermont, it is to enable the vendee, who does not formally take the franchise, to continue the business under a corporate franchise. Is not that all?

Mr. POWERS. That is all there is to it. Simply to authorize the holders of these lands to act as a corporation.

The SPEAKER. But the point of order is that the bill is not in order at the present time, because the rule expressly provides that only bills recommended by the committees, and on the House Calendar, shall be considered in this order. This bill is not on the House Calendar, but on the Union Calendar.

Mr. POWERS. The motion I made was to have the bill treated as on the House Calendar, to have the reference changed. It was as on the House Calendar, to have the reference changed. It was placed on the Union Calendar by inadvertence.

The SPEAKER. There is a difficulty about that, because the Chair must decide these questions with reference to what will be the general effect. The difficulty with that is that the placing of a bill on the House Calendar is intended for two purposes, first that it shall not carry an appropriation or the equivalent of it, and that there shall be notice to the House that it is liable to be taken up. Not being on the House Calendar, even if it ought to have been, there is no notice been, there is no notice.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, if I may be indulged one moment on the point of order—

The SPEAKER. If the point of order is made—

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know the merits of the controversy, because I have not had an opportunity to read the bill. The very object of this rule was to enable the House to give consideration to bills that made no appropriation of money or of public lands. and I am therefore much interested in keeping that rule restricted within its proper sphere. I call the attention of the Speaker to an admission made by the gentleman in charge of the bill, which, it strikes me, is conclusive of the question. He admits that there was a disposition of public lands attempted to be made by the original act, which disposition was not made by reason of the fact that the Supreme Court held that the effort to make it was inefthat the Supreme Court held that the effort to make it was ineffectual. Now, that was a disposition. It was the disposition that they might make of the then public lands by mortgage. It strikes me that to remedy that is dealing with the public lands, and a disposition of the public lands, within the prohibition of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not undertake to pass upon that question. It may come up in some other form, but on the question of a rule of the House of Representatives. Therefore, if the point of order is insisted upon, it must be sustained on that point of order is insisted upon, it must be sustained on that

Mr. McRAE. I insist upon the point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I am willing that the Speaker take the question under consideration and determine whether the bill should be upon the House Calendar or the Union Calendar and its status be preserved until then

Mr. POWERS. I will withdraw the bill for the time being.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company. I will state that the bill has passed the Senate and come over here. I believe it is on the House Calendar

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as Ioliows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any mortgage made by the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company under and by virtue of acts of Congress is fore-closed in any court of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and any sale of the road, equipment, lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property covered by said mortgage is made under a decree or decrees of such courts, the purchaser at any such sale or sales, and their associates or assigns, shall constitute a new company, which shall have and shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, incorporating the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and by acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, which were owned and possessed by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or said mortgages, at the time of such decree of foreclosure; and the incorporation as hereby provided shall be completed and become effective whenever the said purchasers and their associates or assigns shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a certificate of incorporation hereunder, duly acknowledged, specifying the name of such new corporation, its president, and the names of its directors, the amount of its proposed capital stock and bonds, together with certified copy of the decree or decrees ratifying such sale; but nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale: Provided, That the amount of the proposed issue of stock of such new corporation shall not exceed the aggregate amount which the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company has already issued and is now outstanding, except that said corporation may issue an additional amount of stock which, with the stock heretofore issued, shall not exceed the aggregate amount heretofore anthorized by Congress, and such additional stock shall not be issued except for money, labor, or property, estimated at its actual cost value, in exchange for such stock at its full or par value: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making any additional grant of lands or other franchises to such successor corporation, or as a waiver of any rights of the United States now existing to enforce any forfeiture of lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in a

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against this bill that, although it is upon the House Calendar, it should be upon the Union Calendar, and that therefore it is not properly before the House for consideration in this hour. I believe I have already said all I desire to say upon the point of order—when a like House bill was presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. McRAE. I insist that it should be on the Union Calendar.

I make the point of order that, although the bill is upon the House Calendar, it should be on the Union Calendar, and that the im-

Calendar, it should be on the Union Calendar, and that the improper assignment to the House Calendar does not give it the right of consideration. I think that it has been so improperly assigned, because it relinquishes a possible right which the United States has to lands, and gives a right to certain purchasers under a mortgage which they do not now possess, and creates a corporation.

Mr. POWERS. It relinquishes no right whatever. It simply supplies an omission, an obvious omission, in the act of 1871.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that this bill does give important concessions to this road, if its mortgage is anything similar to that of the Northern Pacific. It gives this road, in this act for reorganization, large advantages which the Judiciary Committee of this House, in reporting a similar bill relating to the Northern Pacific, refused to give to that company. If a measure of this kind is to pass at all, it ought at least not to give this Atlantic and Pacific road advantages that were denied to the Northern Pacific. The mortgage which the Northern Pacific Company gave, which the United States consented to, contained a proviso that whenever the lands were sold they should be sold in certain specified bodies or tracts not exceeding certain acreage, a proviso that whenever the lands were sold they should be sold in certain specified bodies or tracts not exceeding certain acreage, the intention being not to allow one purchaser to acquire large bodies of the public domain. It was contrary, as was supposed, to the policy of the United States Government. Now, that is my recollection of it; and the Committee on the Judiciary, with the terms of that act before them, imposed quite a number of limitations in the act for the reorganization of the Northern Pacific that do not occur in this bill. Another thing: There was a provision in that act to prevent the reorganized company from becoming the possessor of large bodies of coal lands. It had been found, in practical operation, that when a railroad company became the possessor. tical operation, that when a railroad company became the possessor of large bodies of coal lands it would deny equal facilities of transportation to other companies or persons who might own coal

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me one moment?

Mr. TERRY. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. 1ERRY. 1es, sir; certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Are you desirous of submitting the amendments that were imposed upon the Northern Pacific bill?

Mr. TERRY. I was not in favor of the Northern Pacific bill even as amended; but if we are to pass any bill for the reorganization-

I have not the slightest objection to that amendment being made to this bill, if the gentleman will accept it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Arkansas point out any proposition involving a tax or charge, appropriation of money authorizing payment out of an appropriation already made, or releasing any liability of the United States for money or property? Mr. TERRY.

Releasing any liability?

The SPEAKER. Or liabilities.
Mr. TERRY. I take it that the United States should not relinquish any rights or limitations that the people are interested in.

The SPEAKER. It is not releasing any right, but releasing any liability that confines the term. There is nothing that requires that a proposition of action on the part of the United States should go to the Committee of the Whole unless it refers to a certain specified thing. Now, can the gentleman state any of those specified things is stated in this bill?

Mr. TERRY. I was about to state to the Speaker that I could not recollect the exact phraseology of that rule; but I wanted to call the attention of the Speaker to the matter and let him solve it with the rule before him. The mortgage that was authorized by an act of Congress about 1871, among other terms, provided that whenever these lands were sold they should be sold in small bedies not exceeding a certain amount.

bodies, not exceeding a certain amount.

Now, I think that that was a reservation of a valuable right to the people of the United States; and that is given away in this bill by permitting this company to acquire these lands all in a body and not to conform to the terms of the mortgage which the United States assented to about the year 1871. That is the point I desire to make. This is virtually another disposition, inasmuch as it allows the lands permitted to be mortgaged to pass away in a form that the mortgage of 1871 did not authorize, and which the Government of the United States consented to on account of the Government of the United States consented to on account of this condition being in the mortgage. I think it is a point worthy of very serious consideration. And certainly this bill ought to have some amendments, which I am not prepared just at this moment to offer. This is a matter that ought to be very carefully considered in this House; and I further say that if we are going to have this bill up the gentleman from Vermont ought to allow members of the House an opportunity to present proper amendments to it, and also to see where they should come in. In a matter of so much importance let us proceed cautiously.

ments to it, and also to see where they should come in. In a matter of so much importance let us proceed cautiously.

Mr. POWERS. If there is any way by which this bill can maintain its privilege I have no objection to its going over until to-morrow, to enable gentlemen to propose such amendments as they desire; but I do not want to lose the advantage of the position we now have of having this bill before the House and thus have it go over until another call of the committee; but if there be any way to preserve its rights, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not had his attention called to any provision in this bill which seems to be obnoxious to the provision of Rule XXIII, section 3; and therefore sees no reason why the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That opinion seems to cover the whole ground; and it also may be a question whether the bill, being on the Calendar, is not entitled to be heard in this way; but on that the Chair does not pass at present. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the bill is in order.

Mr. POWERS. I would ask unanimous consent, then, that the bill may be postponed until to-morrow, at 1 o'clock, for fur-

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman misunderstood my proposition. It was that the bill go over until to-morrow, for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to formulate his amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers] that he let the bill go over until 1 o'clock on the next legislative day after to-morrow, for this additional reason: To-morrow is private bill day under the rule, and as it is not likely that many such bills can receive consideration during this short session, I think it would be well to devote the day to private bills.

Mr. POWERS. Idesire to accommodate everybody, Mr. Speaker, and I am willing that this bill shall go over until Monday.

Mr. BARRETT. The amendment that I wish to offer is one that I think will be generally acceptable, and I would like to have

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can state his amendment. The bill is now before the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. The effect of the decision of the Chair, as I understand it, is that this bill does not require to be considered in Committee of the Whole, but may be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. It does not require to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 4, at the end of line 41, insert:

"But no stock shall be issued by said corporation until such issue shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior as actually representing money, labor, or property estimated at its actual cost value, at the full par value of said issue of stock."

Mr. POWERS. I have no objection to that. The amendment was adopted.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. Where the line of such railway is now located within the limits of any State, or where such line is now located within a Territory which may hereafter become a State, such State, or such Territory when it shall become a State, shall be empowered to require such corporation to become incorporated within such State or States as may be provided by the laws thereof.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, if there is no other amendment to be offered at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be made a special order for Monday next at 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gen-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. McRAE. I object to making the bill a special order. I have no objection to its going over to be called up during the morning hour of any day, but as I understand the rule, if the bill is made a special order for a particular time, it will become "unfinished business" and take precedence of everything else until it is disposed of, and I object to giving it that privilege.

Mr. POWERS. I was trying to accommodate my friend from Arkansas, but he seems rather difficult to accommodate.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request of the gen-making it a special order and giving it special privileges on some other day which it does not have to-day.

Mr. McRAE. But making it a special order would give it precedence for every day until disposed of, and that is what I object to.

The SPEAKER. The present rule has very much that effect if the House so chooses.

Mr. McRAE. Not unless the committee is called again and the consideration completed on the same day.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to gentlemen that Mon-Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to gentlemen that Monday will be District day.

Mr. POWERS. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to waive his objection.

Mr. McRAE. I do not. If the gentleman wants the bill to go over, I have no objection, provided it does not acquire any additional privilege; but, for my part, I am ready to go on with the consideration of it now.

Mr. POWERS. I do not desire that it shall have any special

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the bill is made a special order it will have special privileges, will it not?

The SPEAKER. It will, unless the order is modified so as to take away those special privileges.

Mr. McRAE. Well, that the gentleman from Vermont has consented to; I objected, unless he would consent.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Monday is District of Columbia day, is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers] evidently has it in mind to call up this bill on Monday. Now, would the bill necessarily come up under the arrangement proposed, in the bill necessarily come up under the arrangement proposed, in view of the rule of the House providing that Monday shall be devoted to the consideration of District of Columbia business?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent on the part of the House can at any time vacate its rules.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill goes over until Monday next at 1 o'clock, does it not then have just the same privileges that it has now, and no more?

The SPEAKER. That would depend on the arrangement made by the House. As it stands now, consideration of the bill must by the House. As it stands now, consideration of the bill must proceed. If there is a proposition to postpone the consideration of the bill until Monday, or any other day, the effect of that proposition will depend upon its terms.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. As I understood, the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRae] was that this bill go over until Monday at 1 o'clock, to be taken up then under just the same conditions that would apply to-day.

Mr. McRAE. I have not made any proposition except to state that I object to the bill going over unless it goes over to be called

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that there might be an understanding on the part of the House that this bill be in order when the roll of committees is called on Monday, and the call of committees might be continued to day with that understanding.

Mr. McRAE. I will agree to that proposition.

The SPEAKER. That would give the bill the same rights then that it has now.

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that.
Mr. POWERS. That would be satisfactory.
The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, however, to the gentleman from Vermont that the committee would not be regularly called on Monday; the call would have to be consented to by The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia does not seem to be present.

Mr. POWERS. The proposition was that this bill should not lose the position it now has.

The SPEAKER. On Saturday next it could be brought up without conflict with anything else

Mr. McRAE. I am perfectly willing that when the committees are next called, if the gentleman desires the bill to be called up, it may come up; but what I want is that it shall not have the privileges which belong to a special order.

Mr. POWERS. The bill might come up on Monday, as I

Mr. McRAE. No.
Mr. POWERS. By unanimous consent.
The SPEAKER. That arrangement would have to be made by unanimous consent, as it would displace the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. DRAPER (when the Committee on Patents was called). I call up Senate bill No. 2306, to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4966 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4966. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic or musical composition for which a copyright has been obtained, without the consent of the proprietor of said dramatic or musical composition, or his heirs or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor, such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just. If the unlawful 'performance and representation be willful and for profit, such person or persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year. Any injunction that may be granted by any circuit court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, restraining and enjoining the performance or representation of any such dramatic or musical composition may be served on the parties against whom such injunction may be enforced by proceedings to punish for contempt or otherwise by any other circuit court or judge in the United States; but the defendants in said action, or any or either of them, may make a motion in any other circuit in which he or they may be engaged in performing or representing said dramatic or musical composition to dissolve or set aside the said injunction upon such reasonable notice to the plaintiff as the circuit court or the judge before whom said motion shall be made shall deem proper; service of said motion to be made on the plaintiff in person or on his attorneys in the action. The circuit courts or judges thereof shall have jurisdiction to enforce said injunction and to hear and determine a motion to dissolve the same, as herein provided, as fully as if the action were pending or brought in the circuit in which said motion is made.

"The clerk of the court, or judge granting the injunction, shall, when required so to do by the court hearing

Mr. DRAPER. I call for the reading of the report. The report (by Mr. DRAPER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Draper) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S.2306) entitled "An act to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights," have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

The purpose of the proposed measure is twofold: First, to secure to musical compositions the same measure of protection under the copyright law as is now afforded to productions of a strictly dramatic character. There can be no reason why the same protection should not be extended to one species of literary property of this general character as to the other, and the omission to include protective provisions for musical compositions in the law sought to be amended was doubtless the result of oversight. The committee is of the opinion that the existing law should be so amended as to provide adequate protection to this species of literary production.

The bill provides, secondly, for added means for the protection of authors of dramatic and operatic works.

In recent years the business of producing and staging plays and operas by American authors has largely increased, and in many instances has met with the very highest measure of success. Many of the best stage productions of modern times have been the work of American authors.

These productions in many instances have been carefully and elaborately placed upon the stage at very heavy-expense to proprietors and managers, and their representation has given employment in various ways to thousands of people.

The existing law relative to copyrights has been found to be inadequate to properly protect authors and producers of American plays and operas in the enjoyment of their rights of property in these duly copyrighted productions. Persons in various sections of the country have, without the shadow of right or authority, pirated these works, and, confining their operations chiefly to the smaller and more remote towns, have given representations of these stolen productions for their own individual profit, and without making any compensation whatever to authors or owners. Under existing conditions no adequate remedy exists for this unlawful usurpation of property rights.

The offenders are almost uniformly men without attachable means, and dety all the ordinary processes by which they might be mulcted in damages. The representation of these pirated productions is generally given for a night or two only at a given place, and the offenders filt from section to section and from State to State and bid deflance to the processes of the courts seeking to restrain their unlawful acts.

Serious embarrassments have arisen in the efforts to enforce these judicial orders and to punish offenders for disobedience of them.

While it is true that an injunction order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction is operative upon the conscience of the party restrained everywhere in the United States, it appears that an attachment for contempt of such order can not be executed except in the circuit of the court which issued the original order, and this bill seeks to overcome this difficulty.

The bill further provides that the piracy, i. e., the unlawful production of any duly copyrighted play or opera, if it be determined that such unlawful representation was willful and for profit, shall be a misdemeanor, and shall subject the offender, upon conviction, to the liability of imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

The reason for the enactment of this provision has already been outlined. The unauthorized publication of a copyri

These conditions do not exist, as a rule, in the case of the professional play pirate.

It is difficult to serve him with injunction and court orders because of his migratory habits, and as he is frequently without attachable means it is impossible to satisfy a money judgment against him.

Testimony has been adduced before the committee showing that the losses accruing to authors and owners of copyrighted productions by these piracies amount to large sums each year. So little protection is in fact afforded under existing conditions that many prominent American dramatic authors no longer go to the trouble and expense of taking out copyrights for their works.

Conceding that for light causes nothing should be added to the jurisdiction or powers of the Federal courts, it would seem that the circumstances in connection with the wholesale piracy of these productions of native authors demand that something more nearly akin to drastic measures should be invoked to remedy the evil.

Believing that productions of the character mentioned constitute property in the fullest and best sense of the term, your committee sees no good reason why this species of literary production should not be surrounded by the same measure of protection as is accorded to other classes of property.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, the report which has just been

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, the report which has just been

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, the report which has just been read fully explains the purpose of this bill. It was very fully considered by the Committee on Patents of this House, and unanimously reported. It has also been considered by the same committee in the Senate, and has passed that body. I do not suppose there will be need of discussing the measure at length, and I do not care to do so unless it is necessary. I call for a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment, Mr. Speaker. I do not desire to antagonize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Draper]; but there are some features in this bill which I think the House should understand before voting on the measure. If I understood correctly the reading of the bill, it authorizes the filing of a bill in the circuit court of the United States in the city of New York, and under that proceeding that court would be permitted York, and under that proceeding that court would be permitted to serve notice upon a company performing, say, in San Francisco, and that company, 3,000 miles away, might have their rights determined by a judge in New York City.

There is another remarkable feature in this bill which I observed by the reading. If I understand the measure—and the gentleman from Massachusetts will correct me if I am wrong—it provides that one part of the case may be tried in New York and the other part in San Francisco, or anywhere else where there may be a court of the United States; so that the same case may be pending in several courts at the same time. That would be a clear invasion of the principle that has heretofore prevailed in all cases, in both the Federal and the State courts.

There is another point in this bill which is a little remarkable. It fixes the amount of penalty to be inflicted at not less than $100 in any case, regardless of the question whether the party has been damaged to that extent or not.

Mr. LACEY. That corresponds with the present law as to dramatic performances—that is to say, the liquidated damages are $50 and $100 under the present law as to dramatic performances. Mr. HOPKINS. If that is true, it does not apply to any other

Mr. LACEY. No.
Mr. HOPKINS. The general principle, as every lawyer understands, is that when a person claims damages for an infringement of his property rights he must show in the court where his case is commenced the amount of damages that he has sustained. But this bill provides that this sum shall be paid as damages regard-less of the question whether the party has been injured to that extent or not.

As I have said, I do not care to antagonize my friend from Massachusetts, but I think the House should understand the character of this bill before voting upon it. It proposes in behalf of this particular class of persons a stretch of Federal authority which is not sanctioned in reference to any other kind of property in this country; and it seems to me it is a stretch of power that it is dangerous to permit with respect even to the productions of playwriters.

Mr. DRAPER rose

Mr. DRAPER rose.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me a question? I notice the bill provides that the willful giving of a dramatic or musical performance without authority shall be a misdemeanor, and may be prosecuted criminally in the Federal courts. I wish to ask my friend the chairman of the Committee on Patents what is the necessity for this extreme measure? Has not the present system of investigation and injunction by the United States courts been found ample for the protection of rights of this character so far as dramatic performances are concerned?

Mr. DRAPER. It has not been found of any value at all.

Mr. DRAPER. It has not been found of any value at all.
Mr. LACEY (continuing). If musical performances are put in the same category as dramatic works, would it not?
Mr. DRAPER. I can reply to only one gentleman at a time, but taking up the last question, that proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], the reason why the bill was introduced is because the present legislation does not protect dramatic authors; and many of our dramatic authors have ceased to copyright their works because they are not sufficiently protected under the pres-

In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], the language he objects to on the first page of the bill, in regard to the sum of damages, is already the law. It is a part of the present law and there is no new legislation about it.

Further, I think my friend misunderstands the bill, at which I am somewhat surprised, as I had the pleasure of submitting it to him in advance of its presentation to the House. As I understand it, it provides, in case an injunction is taken out against a company illegally performing a play, for instance, in New York, and the next night goes to Jersey City, that instead of it being necessary to take out a new process through an injunction pro ceeding in Jersey City the injunction taken in New York will hold against it, unless the company shows cause why it should not hold. As the case stands now, the law is utterly inadequate to protect against the production of plays in an unauthorized manner for this reason by strolling companies.

I would say that this legislation was asked for by substantially the entire dramatic profession of the United States, and we have had many and vary interesting hearings upon the subject. I have had many and very interesting hearings upon the subject. I have a list of the signatures here of some of those who have asked for the legislation, and among the many dramatists who have asked for it I find such names as Bronson Howard, David Belasco, Charles it I find such names as Bronson Howard, David Belasco, Charles Barnard, Henry G. Carleton, Reginald De Koven, James A. Herne, Charles Hoyt, Joe Howard, jr., Bill Nye, John Philip Sousa, J. Cheever Goodwin, John J. Braham, Arthur Wallack, Louis Harrison, and others. Among the actors we find such names as Helena Modjeska, Marie Jansen, Stuart Robson, William H. Crane, Annie Ward Tiffany, James B. Mackie, Kate Claxton, Thomas Q. Seabrook, Louis Aldrich, Maida Craigen, Maude Banks, Marian Manola-Mason, Robert Hilliard, Henry E. Dixey, A. M. Palmer, Daniel Frohman, Charles Frohman, Henry E. Abbey, Wilson Barrett, John Drew, Georgia Cayvan, James O'Neill, Frank Mayo, B. F. Keith, Canary & Lederer, Charles Hoyt and Frank McKee, T. Henry French, H. C. Miner, W. H. Thompson, William Faversham, Ferdinand Gottschalk, Bessie Tyree, Mark Murphy, W. D. Jones, and many others. and many others.

The statement of all of them is that under the present law, that pretends to give protection to copyrighted plays, no protection can be offered for the reason already suggested, and no indemnification can be obtained against any illegal performances in New York or elsewhere, because if an injunction is taken out in New York the players can appear to Jarsay City and perform there York the players can go over to Jersey City and perform there two or three days before an injunction can be gotten out, and then be off to Philadelphia, will give as many performances there as possible, and before an injunction can be taken out in that city perhaps they will be off to Baltimore or somewhere else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is intended by this legislation is that the first injunction taken out shall serve in the other districts of the United States unless cause is shown why it should not.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does this bill require that the injunction shall be upon hearings or upon mere application? Is it the intention of the law that the injunction may issue without a hearing, and cover all the Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will permit me, he referred

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman will permit me, he referred to the fact of having submitted this bill to me. He does not wish, I presume, to convey the impression to the House that I have approved of the bill and recommend its provisions?

Mr. DRAPER. I purposely did not say that. I said I submitted it to the gentleman, and was surprised to see that he misapprehended the provisions. That was all. I did not mean to imply anything further.

anything further.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DRAPER. Certainly.
Mr. HULICK. In this bill, in line 14, I find these words: If the unlawful performance and representation be willful and for profit would like to ask the gentleman if this provision of the bill will affect charitable organizations or amateur associations in performing or representing any dramatic or musical composition for a charitable purpose, in order to obtain money for any benevolent institution or otherwise?

Mr. DRAPER. Not as I understand it. The matter was discussed in both committees.

Mr. HULICK. But this provides that any person, without any exception whatever, guilty of this offense shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned for a period of not exceeding one year, and so on. It provides that it shall be unlawful for any person publicly to perform any dramatic or musical composition for which a copyright has been granted under the penalties that I have suggested. Now, if a person should inadvertently, without understanding or examining the statute, engage in such a performance he would be held guilty of violating the act and be subject to the punishment fixed by the statute. There seems to be no exception in the bill as you have drawn it.

Mr. DRAPER. I think there will be no practical danger in that.
Mr. HULICK. Is there any exception of that class of performances anywhere in the statute? There certainly is not in this bill.
Mr. DRAPER. Unless there is something more to be said, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Let me ask the gentleman my question

Mr. DRAPER. I will yield for another question.
Mr. CONNOLLY. I asked whether or not the injunction that you provide for or specify here is to be an injunction granted upon hearing. I find on referring to the bill that a mere temporary injunction may be sufficient, without a hearing.

Mr. HOOKER. It provides that a motion may be made to set

Mr. CONNOLLY. I see the bill provides that any injunction that may be granted by any circuit court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, restraining, etc., may be served on the parties against whom it is granted anywhere in the United States. Now, that may be a temporary injunction, granted without hearing, upon merely filing a bill setting out the facts claimed, and asking for a preliminary injunction. That may be done without hear-ing, and that injunction then, without any evidence ever having been heard in support of it, will be enforced everywhere in the United States to stop the performance.

Mr. HOOKER. The injunction would not be made permanent until after a hearing was had.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It becomes permanent everywhere in the United States under the language of this bill, upon merely asking for an injunction, and having it issued. It becomes permanent then until the other party comes into court and seeks to have it set aside.

Mr. DRAPER. Which he has a right to do.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Of course he has a right to do it, but in the meantime it will be enforced everywhere in the United States.

Mr. DRAPER. It is provided in the bill that he may come in and seek to have it set aside.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In the meantime it restrains him everywhere, and the practical effect of it is to give a permanent injunction without any evidence to show that the facts set out in the bill are true. Anyone can go into court, make a charge, and get an injunction that is enforced everywhere.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Why should it not restrain him everywhere.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Why should it not restrain him every-

Mr. CONNOLLY. Because the fact has not been established.
Mr. SULLOWAY. If it is to be enforced anywhere, why not let it be enforced everywhere within the jurisdiction of the United

Mr. CONNOLLY. Of course, if you make it an injunction granted on a hearing, that is a different thing, but this is an injunction granted upon a mere ex parte showing.

Mr. SULLOWAY. But the court would take care to order an immediate hearing.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The court could not order an immediate hearing.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And a bond would be required, if there was danger of damage.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The court might require a bond and it

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is assuming that the court would not do the right thing. . Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. CONNOLLY. We ought to require the court to do the right thing to protect the parties.

Mr. HOOKER. The court will do that.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I think the courts may be relied upon to protect everybody.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does not this preclude any person from singing a topical ballad if it is copyrighted? Would not that be included in the terms "musical composition," in line 12?

Mr. DRAPER. If it is copyrighted, of course.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Then it would include a copyrighted ballad.

Mr. DRAPER. It would include the performance of anything that was the property of another, without authority. As this matter has awakened more discussion than I expected, I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman who introduced the bill, Mr. CUMMINGS of New York of New York.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment, to offer an amendment? And then the gentleman can proceed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will.

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment. Strike out all after the word "just," in line 14, and before the word "only," in the seventeenth line; and also strike out in line 20 the word "such."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Dalzell). The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "just," in the fourteenth line, and to the word "only," in the seventeenth line thereof; and in line 20 strike out the word "such;" so as to read, "representation of any dramatic or musical composition."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman would entirely emasculate the bill and leave the law practically where it is to-day—worthless. There are 5,000 theaters and opera houses in the United States. They cost from $10,000 to $800,000 each. These theaters employ 50,000 persons outside of actors and actresses. There are upward of 400 manuscript plays, written or owned by citizens of the United States, played nightly in our cities. They give employment to from 5,000 to 6,000 actors and actresses. The total of plays involved is over 1,500. The cost of producing these plays ranges from $2,000 to $25,000 each. This enormous aggregate invested is entirely dependent upon the This enormous aggregate invested is entirely dependent upon the

The laws of the United States recognize the right to perform a play as the exclusive property of the author or owner of the play. The copyright law imposes severe fines for the punishment of all persons who perform a play without the consent of the owner. The Federal courts provide facilities for preventing, by injunction, the unauthorized performance of plays. It would, therefore, seem that the right to perform a play was thus perfectly protected.

But the law does not protect this class of property. There is under the copyright law no real protection against the unlawful performance of a play. An injunction obtained against the unwarranted performance of a play is of comparatively limited value. A man who steals a valuable play can sell a copy for a few dollars, or perform it every night for months in practical immunity from arrest, fine, or imprisonment. There are innumerable companies in all parts of the country engaged at all times in the unlawful performance of plays to which they have no legal or moral right. The theft of successful new plays and the sale of stolen copies of the manuscripts have become a regularly organized business. There is one firm in Chicago alone that advertises the manuscripts of hundreds of plays to not one of which it has any right whatever.

These stolen plays are performed by irresponsible parties withont means, local habitation, or reputation. An injunction obtained in one Federal district is inoperative in any other, and by crossing an imaginary line the person conducting the unlawful performance may defy the United States law and continue to perform the play until its commercial value is completely destroyed. Entire play until its commercial value is completely destroyed. Entire sections of the country, East, West, North, and South, are now so overrun with these unlawful producers of plays that reputable companies are completely debarred from entering them. The local managers and owners of theaters are nowhere in sympathy with these unlawful producers of plays, but it has now become almost impossible for them to detect a fraudulent production when contracting for professionation their house the production when contracting for professionation in the production when contracting for professional contractions are completely described by the production when contracting for professional contractions are completely described by the production when the production tracting for performances in their houses.

No man can defend this great wrong. Look at it more closely. The man who is robbed of the work of his intellect is told to go to the courts. He goes to the circuit court in the district where the play is being produced and gets an injunction. The pirate skips into another circuit and displays his stolen goods. If followed with a second injunction he goes into a third circuit, and the chase continues. The owner of the copyright might spend all his profits if he has any, and if not might spend his entire fortune, before he could secure a conviction of the thief.

I know of one case myself. One of McKee Rankin's plays was being pirated in Denver. It was being performed in the opera house there. I say "performed"—I should say "butchered." The owner went before the judge. He secured an injunction against the performance, and the man who was running the show promptly turned the company over to another pirate, and that gentleman produced the play in that very opera house in that very city on the next day. If he had been followed up he would have turned the company over to a third pirate, and the performance would have been continued indefinitely.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time this bill has been before the House of Representatives. It was here in the last Congress. As a remedy it was proposed to give any Federal court jurisdiction over the entire country. I am not a lawyer and I shall not attempt to use legal phraseology. I shall try to make it so plain that even a common bootblack can understand it. [Laughter.] Sav an author has copyrighted a play and sold it. Twenty-five Say an author has copyrighted a play and sold it. Twenty-five thousand dollars has been spent in the city of New York to pro-duce it. Somebody out in Chicago, or New Orleans, or San Franduce it. Somebody out in Chicago, or New Orleans, or San Francisco mangles it and sends out piratical troupes to perform that mangled play without authority from the author. The author or purchaser can go to a Federal judge—say the circuit judge of the New York district—and get an injunction which would hold in every circuit in the United States. Such was the bill proposed in the last Congress. The House voted it down, because they did not think it proper to give a Federal judge in New York complete jurisdiction over a matter in Texas. I do not say that the House was not right, although I must say that if the force bill had become a law it would have given the Federal courts far more juriswas not right, although I must say that if the force offi had become a law it would have given the Federal courts far more jurisdiction than that proposed in the last Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill attempts to correct what the House thought was wrong in the bill then. As I understand it now, it gives a Federal judge in New York the power to issue a mandamus or an injunction or power to punish for contempt, and that power can be exercised in any other judicial district in the United States if it is indorsed by the judge ruling in that district. If he refuses his assent, that ends the whole matter, and the man who owns the copyright remains unprotected. But if the judge believes that the pirate was at work in his district, by a simple indorsement he could pen the pirate and stop the robbery.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RAY. Do I understand the gentleman to be now stating what the law is, or what this bill proposes?

Mr. CUMMINGS. What this bill proposes.

Mr. RAY. I do not think there is any such provision in the bill as the gentleman suggests. The way I read it it provides that an injunction may issue by a judge, say in the circuit court of the State of New York, and that that injunction may be served any-State of New York, and that that injunction may be served any-where in the United States, that it shall be operative wherever served, and upon that person wherever he may go, and that the court or the judge in any circuit anywhere in the United States may enforce it. The bill does not require any indorsement by the

Mr. CUMMINGS. Well, that is practically the same thing-probably a little better.

Mr. RAY. But it does not require any indorsement.

Mr. CUMMINGS. But it leaves it in the power of the judge to enforce the injunction or not to enforce it, and that is the point I am getting at. Here, for instance, is a man who spends $10,000 for a play, which is produced in the city of New York. It is a failure. He loses his $10,000. He picks his flint and tries again. He spends $15,000 more for a second play, and that also proves a failure, and his money vanishes. Finally, after repeated efforts, he procures a play that is a great success. It is bringing in money enough to more than repay him for all the losses he has incurred. Now, the moment that play is successful, ten or a dozen or perhaps twenty pirates seize it. They send their stenographers into the theater to copy the words. They can buy them, if they wish, from a company organized in Chicago, which sends its stenographers and its musicians to steal words or music. Next, these ten or twenty piratical companies spread themselves all over the Union. They do not give the play as it was written by the author. It may require thirty or forty performers to present it properly; but they mangle and mutilate it so that it can be performed by half a dozen people. They damage irretrievably the property owned by the author, or by the man who put up the money to produce it originally. The author received his copyright from the owned by the author, or by the man who put up the money to produce it originally. The author received his copyright from the United States, and the theft of his play is a robbery of his brains. Yet he remains unprotected. The Government virtually receives his money under false pretenses. If the thief was at the South and stole a hog, he would probably be shot or hanged, but he can steal the product of another man's brain and be virtually protected by defective laws.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The penalties of the bill apply to musical compositions publicly played or performed, either with or without hire. Take a musical ballad, for instance, that is sung upon the street by boys and girls, or played upon an organ without compensation, the provisions of this bill would apply to that, would they not; and if so, ought there not to be an amendment to

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say to my friend that the author of a popular ballad is always too glad to have it sung upon the streets or played by a hurdy-gurdy, because that brings it into public notice.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. That is true as a matter of sentiment, but does not this bill apply to cases where ballads are sentiment, but does not this bill apply to cases where ballads are sung publicly in that way?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think not. I have not examined it carefully. It is not the bill that I introduced. It is the one that the Senate has passed. There may be a slight difference.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. With the gentleman's permission, I will offer an amendment to meet that case.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have no objection to an amendment for the specific purpose the gentleman suggests. Does he mean where these ballads are sung on the street, or where they are sung in a theater or an opera house, but not for hire?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Under this bill boys and girls singing popular ballads on the street would be liable to the penditive remaided in the bill.

alties provided in the bill.

Mr. CONNOLLY. In the eighth line the bill provides that the penalty shall apply only where the composition is produced without the consent of the proprietor. Now, if these compositions are offered for sale, the consent of the proprietor is implied.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I have no objection to an amendment such as the gentleman from New Jersey suggests, although I think it entirely unnecessary.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Then I will offer it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say to the gentleman from New Jersey that there is one amendment already pending.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Then I will withhold mine until that one is disposed of.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think such an amendment is necessary, because I do not think any trouble will ever arise in the cases the gentleman from New Jersey mentions. I know that when it is desired to perform "The Banker's Daughter," or any other play at a church festival, the permission of the author is always given; in fact, the author is glad to give such permission, because it makes his composition more popular, and thereby enhances its value. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is a disgrace to the Congress of the United States to have the dramatic authors and the musical composers of this country coming here year after year praying for relief and asking simple justice for the protection of their property—such protection as you give to cabinetmakers, machinists, and breeders of razor-backed hogs. [Applause.]
[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, in offering the amendment which has been submitted to the House, I think that in the bill as it now stands the penalties are entirely too severe. The bill makes no exceptions in favor of any persons or any company that may present any copyrighted musical or dramatic composition. Upon further consideration, however, and with the consent of the chairman of the committee, I will withdraw the amendment I have offered and offer instead that which I send to the desk.

Insert after the word "year," in line 17, the following: "Provided, That if said performance and representation shall be for charitable or benevolent purposes, it shall be a good defense to any prosecution under this act."

Mr. HULICK. Only a word in support of this amendment. I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Patents in the Fifty-third Congress when a bill of this character in regard to dramatic performances was considered by that committee. I sympathize with the friends of this measure in the efforts they are making to protect the dramatic copyrights, and I think the law should operate very severely upon persons who may willfully infringe upon such rights.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.
Mr. CUMMINGS. If it is wrong to rob a man at all, is it not wrong to rob him through the operations of a church? For that is adding hypocrisy to theft. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULICK. I can not agree with my friend at all in his conclusion. I think that the authors of these dramatic compositions—the parties who have an interest in these representations and who would undoubtedly be greatly benefited-should do for the church as much at least as my amendment contemplates, and the parties as much at least as my amendment contempates, and the parties presenting the play or musical concerts should not be subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. They have never refused it, my friend.

Mr. HULICK. Very well; then it should not be assumed that they will in any case withhold their consent to this amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. All that need be done by any church or charitable organization desiring to perform a convicient of nice.

charitable organization desiring to perform a copyrighted piece is to ask permission of its author; such permission is always gladly granted. I defy the gentleman to show one case where it has ever een refused.

Mr. HULICK. I have no doubt that the authors of compositions of this class are as generous as my friend from New York claims that they are; and I have no doubt they would cheerfully assent to this amendment, so that where any of these productions are presented for benevolent or charitable purposes no penalty shall attach.

Mr. RAY. If we are to recognize the fact that these copyrights belong to the authors of the compositions, then, having recognized this species of property, should it be any defense for any person who may steal such property to say that he stole it for charitable purposes?

Mr. HULICK. Not at all.

Mr. RAY. If I steal your potatoes, should it be any defense that I stole them to give them to the poor, and did give them to the poor, or gave them to a church fair or to some other charitable the poor, or gave them to a church fair or to some other charitable

Mr. HULICK. Certainly not. But if a church or a charitable institution should produce a musical representation protected by copyright, it should be a defense, if they are indicted or prosected for a rightion of the law, that the act was not done for percuted for a violation of the law, that the act was not done for personal gain, but for a charitable purpose.

Mr. RAY. There would not be any profit to me if I stole your potatoes and gave them to the poor.

Mr. HULICK. Very true.

Mr. RAY. I would not do it for profit.
Mr. HULICK. I think the gentleman does not comprehend the force of this amendment. It does not propose to authorize any charitable or religious organization to infringe upon any legal right, but it provides—

Mr. RAY. It simply proposes to recognize in this bill the principle that, if any church or charitable organization, for the purposes of pleasure or entertainment, should find it convenient to steal the property of a dramatic or musical author, they may do so at will, and the act shall not be regarded as unlawful.

Mr. HULICK. I only gave way for the gentleman to ask a

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK] to a point which may obviate some of this discussion. At line 14 of this bill I find the words "if the unlawful performance and representation be willful and for profit." Now, if church organizations did not do the thing for profit, their defense would be complete under the bill as

Mr. HULICK. If they gave a performance for profit, of course the act would be willful. But the performance might not be for profit. My amendment does not propose to license religious or charitable organizations to make these representations, but it simply contemplates that if there should be an attempt to prosecute them they may exempt themselves from punishment by making them they may exempt themselves from punishment by making the defense that the performance was for a charitable or benevolent purpose. But this provision would not interfere with the power of the courts to enjoin any such association from making a musical or other representation. The bill fully provides against infringements of copyrights by injunctions and power to punish as for contempt for disregarding the orders of the court.

Mr. QUIGG. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? There are a number of dramatic companies organized, as the gentleman are a number of dramatic companies organized, as the gentleman is doubtless aware, for the purpose of cooperating with churches and charitable institutions, and which go to church and charitable organizations offering to give a performance for a division of the profits. Now—

Mr. HULICK. That would not be a good defense. It would be in that case a performance for profit, and would be subject to the penalties provided in the act.

Mr. QUIGG. But if you put in that amendment, would it not allow this proceeding?

Mr. HULICK. No; I think not. I do not intend it in that way.

I think the amendment is clearly not susceptible of that construction.

I sympathize with the purposes of the bill, and agree that these parties ought to be protected. But at the same time I think it would be a great hardship if the strict letter of this law were applied in many cases which would readily present themselves to any gentleman who gives it a moment's thought. Many of these per-formances, as gentlemen are aware, in remote country districts are gotten up on the spur of the moment by people who do not understand these rights, who have not examined the statutes in reference to the matter; and these musical and dramatic performances are inaugurated perhaps for a charitable purpose and for charity alone. Now, in such cases, if these persons so engaging in such performances shall be arrested for a violation of the law, the amendment provides that it will be a proper defense to say that it was not the intention to violate the statute or to rob anybody of his right private the laws of the first of the property of the prop his right, using the language of my friend from New York [Mr. Cumings], but merely a defense against prosecution under the bill because it was not a performance undertaken for profit. But it would not be a defense against the injunction of the court or against the party undertaking to give such performance if the amendment is adopted. I do not understand that would be its effect. I simply want to protect, in such cases, entirely innocent people engaged for a charitable purpose, or perhaps members of a benevolent organization, if by chance they should present a play or musical programme of a character which would come within the provisions of this bill, so that the defense might be set up in a provisions of this bill, so that the detense might be set up in a criminal prosecution that it was not intended for profit to themselves individually, but only for benevolent or charitable objects. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] tells us that the bill does not contemplate prosecutions in cases contemplated by this amendment. I can not agree with him. There is no exception in the bill. He says no prosecutions would ever be made under the bill as it is. That may be true; nevertheless I think we should not make it possible for such prosecutions to be had and I therefore offered this amendment.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the amendment is unnecessary, and I hope it will not be adopted. I ask a

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. Hulick, and it was rejected

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I withdraw my offer of an amendment.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "just," in line 14, on page 1 of the bill, down to the word "any," in line 17 of the bill, and insert:

"The printing, publication, and sale of such dramatic or musical composition by the proprietor thereof shall be deemed a sufficient consent to the public performance or representation thereof."

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, a brief explanation of the

I think this bill has been drawn in a much more drastic manner than the House really understands it. Take one of our ordinary popular songs; it is copyrighted and sold; it may under this bill be sung in the private parlor, or perhaps sung on the streets, but if any troupe of performers should wish to introduce the song on the stage in connection with its performance and publicly render such composition, such troupe becomes at once subject to the penalties of this statute. It seems to me that the act should not be drawn in that severe form.

There is no reason, as far as I am able to understand, why a per-

There is no reason, as far as I am able to understand, why a person who writes a popular song, sets it to music, prints and copyrights it, and publicly sells that music and song should still retain the right to say where it shall be used, and have the privilege of punishing anybody for using it in public without his consent. For that reason I think the modification I have offered should be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. QUIGG. If the gentleman will allow me, is it not a part of his property? Suppose I am the author of a song, and make so much money, on a percentage basis, on each copy of the song sold, is not the song my property for still another profitable purpose? Suppose, for instance, that I should sell to my colleague from New York [Mr. Cummings]—who for the purpose of this illustration may be described as a popular concert-hall singer—the exclusive right to sing that song publicly and for profit. Now, if anybody else, another clever performer, comes along and duplicates the performance which his genius has created, am I not robbed? Does not your amendment take from us an obvious not robbed? Does not your amendment take from us an obvious not robbed? Does not your amendment take from us an obvious property right?

Mr. LACEY. In other words, it is as if a man who patents and sells a sewing machine should ask us to make it a penitentiary offense for the young woman, the sewing girl, to use the machine.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, no; that is not at all a parallel case.

Mr. LACEY. The point I make is that when the song or dramatic performance has been once copyrighted, published, and sold it becomes a public article just as much as any other article that is sold. The right passes from the originator to the purchaser. that is sold. The right passes from the originator to the purchaser of the article, and when a man purchases such an article he should have the right to use it in public or in private as he pleases. In other words, a man should not be permitted to sell his property and keep it at the same time.

and keep it at the same time.

Mr. QUIGG. I am afraid my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] does not understand how these songs are used.

Mr. LACEY. I think I understand. The songs are used in various ways. A song may be incorporated into a variety show and become one of the principal parts of the show.

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely.

Mr. LACEY. And by so doing they will copyright the entire performance, and thus prevent the use of it after selling it to the public.

public.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, no; you can not do that.

Mr. LACEY. Again, too much stress is put upon the brains of these inventions. Nine-tenths of all these copyrighted plays are pirated in the first place. That is, the first pirate is the man who copyrights the play. He gathers his material from a thousand older sources. He makes it original simply by incorporating it into a play, and he can copyright it without any proof of originality. He does not have to go into the Patent Office and prove originality, as a man does who wishes to procure a patent upon a piece of machinery, but a copyright is granted as a matter of right to begin with, on paying the necessary fee and filing the

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then you mean to tell me that our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ pirated the Golden Rule begains some and Saviour Jesus Christ pirated the Golden Rule because some Brahmin promulgated it hundreds of years before He did?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. He took out no patent upon it. Beside that, if He had taken out a patent on the Golden Rule, under this law it would have done Him no good.

Mr. CONNOLLY. No one uses it anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. My friend now proposes that if the Golden Rule should be incorporated into a play by McKee Rankin it would be a copyrighted article, and that that particular combination of words, with the Golden Rule inserted in a particular connection, if convrighted could not be afterwards used in that particular if copyrighted, could not be afterwards used in that particular form. It seems to me the vice of this bill is that it makes an ofform. It seems to me the vice of this bill is that it makes an offense, for which a man may be sentenced to jail for a year, simply for performing in public a thing which may have already been practically pirated by the copyrighting party himself. It is an extreme law, a law that is unnecessary. I grant you, Mr. Speaker, that there is good reason for enlarging the law so as to take in musical compositions. I concede that it would be well to enlarge the law as to the practice, so that the injunctions which are granted in the city of New York may be enforced through appropriate channels in Denver and in other places; but to make a crime out of the violation of a copyright is an extreme application of the law which it seems to me is utterly unjustifiable and unnecessary. We do not authorize it in the infringement of patents. We do not authorize it in the infringement of patents.

Mr. QUIGG. Would it not be the effect of your amendment that if I wrote a song and copyrighted and published it—

Mr. LACEY. And sold it.

Mr. QUIGG. And sold it, that anybody could publicly perform it for profit?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. If you do not want to make it public in that way, you must not sell it. When you once sell it, the right to use it passes with the sale, just the same as with any other patented article, and it should go with the sale.

Mr. QUIGG. The right to use it to the extent of making money out of it?

Mr. LACEY. The right to use it to any extent whatever; that when it is copyrighted, and you pay an additional price for the copyrighted article, the right to use it should go with it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me, so I can get some

Mr. COX. Whit the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. What kind of power do you invoke for the enforce-

Mr. COX. What kind of power do you invoke for the enforcement of this law when it is violated?

Mr. LACEY. The present law requires that the party holding the copyright shall protect himself in his civil rights by a civil proceeding in the courts, just the same as if he had a patented article. This bill proposes to go further. It proposes that you may go into the courts and file informations or obtain indictments and entirely appropriate article. It is a convergence of a convergence of the result of the same as a convergence of the result of the same article. and punish as a crime the use of a copyrighted article. very extreme measure, it seems to me; one which has evidently been drawn up by some lawyer, specially employed by parties holding such copyrights, in an endeavor to make it so strong that the whole power of the Federal Government in its criminal capacity can be invoked and the cost of disputes of this character saddled upon the Government by making a new statutory crime.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does not the putting of these ballads on sale for profit work a dedication or abandonment to the public as a matter of law?

Mr. LACEY. It will if my amendment is adopted.
Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Even without the amendment, would it not be an abandonment of the property as a pure question of law? Mr. LACEY.

Mr. LACEY. Unquestionably; and yet the law is drawn in such a way as that it would probably have no effect.
Mr. COX. He wants to sell it more than once.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa in offering his amendment says that this bill is drawn up in a severe form. That unquestionably is true. But he should consider that the sort of property which we are seeking to protect in this bill is very easily stolen, and that laws which avail to render other forms of property safe from spoliation are of no service with this kind; and so the law, if it is going to accomplish anything, must be severer than one which applies in the case of an ordinary piece of property that has to be physically picked up and carried off and appropriated in some easily observed way in order to constitute a theft. This is literary property, and we are seeking in this bill to protect the author of it in all the rights that ought to accrue to him on account of his production.

Now, one of these rights the gentleman from Iowa seeks to destroy by this amendment, and that is the right to control any production of it, any use of it, out of which the user proposes to make money. When I copyright a song, if it is meritorious, the first and most profitable use to which I can put it is to hand it over to a clever actor and singer, so that he can act it and sing it into popularity. I would not make a dollar on the publication of what might be a very clever song unless it was cleverly introduced on the stage by somebody who knew how to fasten public attenon the stage by sometody who knew how to laster public atten-tion upon it. Does the gentleman from Iowa mean to say that I shall not have that right, or that I shall not be protected in that right? His amendment destroys that right absolutely, and yet he must see that there would be no profit to any publisher of any song in the sale of it unless first he could demonstrate to the pubsong in the sale of it unless first he could demonstrate to the public that it was a clever thing. The people would not know of its existence otherwise. Every one of the songs for which there has been a popular sale has been introduced to the public by some clever performer, who has taught to the public the fact of its attractive tune or amusing words, and then everybody wants it. You destroy his most profitable right in his production. Moreover, when you come straight to the rights of the thing, is it not a very pressessive right that the author of literary or musical comover, when you come straight to the rights of the thing, is it not a very necessary right that the author of literary or musical composition should enjoy a part of every profit which anybody obtains from the use of his brains? This bill does not forbid the singing of his song or the speaking of his piece for amusement, but only that when sung or spoken for profit he shall have some of the profit. It seems that that is a fair, necessary, and equitable thing, if we are going to make an effectual copyright, and otherwise it is impossible that an author can ever make anything out of his work. of his work.

Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question Mr. RAY.

Mr. QUIGG. Certainly.

Mr. RAY. Do you think this would be a violation of the law:
Suppose his song was copyrighted and the owner of it should put that song in all the bookstores in the city of New York or of the United States for public sale, and it should go on sale in that way, and some company, in connection with a church, perhaps, or a county fair, or some other institution, should get up an entertainment and have that song sung in or as a part of that enter-tainment, would that, in your judgment, be a violation of this law? Is this bill intended to stop a thing of that kind? Mr. QUIGG. I do not suppose the bill is intended to stop a thing of that kind, but I think it will operate to do so.

Mr. RAY. If that would make such a use of the song an offense, it is too drastic after it has been put generally upon the

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow hie to answer that question?
Mr. QUIGG. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Permit me to say that it seems to me that in line 8 of the bill we have a complete answer to the question of the gentleman from New York and the very matter which seems to have troubled the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey]. When a man offers a product of his for public sale he gives than his consent that it may be reproduced by anybody. LACEY]. When a man offers a product of his for public sale gives then his consent that it may be reproduced by anybody.

Mr. QUIGG. Perhaps that is so, but I rather think not.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And without the consent probably, then, it becomes an offense; but when he offers it for notorious public sale he means that they shall pay for the use of it provided they do it. I think the point taken by the gentleman from New York is this, but if a man does not offer it in the book stores or York is this, but it a man does not oner it in the book stores or the music stores in the manner suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], then he does not offer it for promiscuous interpretation, but can copyright it and yet sell it to a single singer to be sung. He does not give the right to everybody to use it.

Mr. QUIGG. My friend's answer is not mine. I should say that this bill forbade the reproduction for profit of that song by anybody anywhere and under any circumstances without the owner's consent. That is what the law ought to do. When it is suggested that this is too drastic, I say no, and that there is no profit in the song unless it has the benefit of such a law. So far as its reproduction by a Sunday school at a charitable entertainment is concerned, gentlemen are raising a question that they know the owner of the song will never raise, but in order to protect him everywhere he must have a law under which he can raise that question if he likes

Mr. LACEY. But the law would be enforced by the grand jury or by the district attorney. The composer or author would have nothing to do with it. You are invoking here the criminal stat-can stop this piracy by everybody everywhere you have not drawn it strictly enough to protect anybody anywhere.

Mr. HULICK. Is not the remedy by injunction sufficient to stop all piracy of such productions?

Mr. QUIGG. Of course not. What good has it ever done?

Mr. HULICK. There is the power of the court to enjoin, and to enforce its orders, by fine and imprisonment, against any person who yielded the law or is guilty of contempt of court. son who violates the law or is guilty of contempt of court son who violates the law or is guilty of contempt of court.

Mr. QUIGG. Precisely; but the gentleman knows that the piracy never is stopped in that way.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey], and also in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Hulick] who has just taken his seat. With all due respect to them, it seems to me that they misunderstand the scope, intent, and purpose of this bill. There could be no possible offense under it, were it enacted into law, unless the rendition of the copyrighted song or dramatic composition were without the consent of the person dramatic composition were without the consent of the person owning the copyright. His consent or nonconsent goes to the very gist of the offense. The man who owns a copyrighted song or dramatic composition has the right, if he chooses, to allow any person to use it with or without compensation to him. The offense consists in using it without his consent.

If the owner of the copyright sells to proprietors of bookstores or of music stores throughout the State of New York or elsewhere his copyrighted work, whether a musical or a dramatic composition, for the purposes of general sale by them from their shelves, then, of course, everybody who buys such a composition from those dealers buys with it the consent of the owner of the copyright that they may sing or perform the thing they buy. The sale is made with his consent that the song shall be sung or the composition performed.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. But is not that only one use of the property, and is not the public singing of the song for profit another use?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all; I will show where the mistake arises. If the author or owner of the copyright offers his production for sale everywhere in bookstores and music stores, and they sell it with his consent, then any person who buys it from them of course buys with it his consent to perform it, and there is no offense. But now go to line 14, and you find that if the unlawful performance or representation be for profit, then it will be a misdemeanor. To make it a misdemeanor there must be an unlawful performance. But the performance is not unlawful when the performer buys from a music dealer or from the proprietor of a performer buys from a music dealer or from the proprietor of a bookstore something which the proprietor of the store has himself bought from the owner of the copyright. It is not unlawful for me to reproduce publicly a thing that I have bought in that way, because it is then my own property and I have bought the right to produce it in any place or manner that I please.

Mr. LACEY. Some gentlemen contend that the bill will have an effect directly opposite to that suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and as the amendment which I propose would make the law as the gentleman now claims it is, what objection can there be to inserting the amendment?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A very great objection. It was

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A very great objection. It was pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigd]. Under this bill if the owner of a copyright does not sell to dealers the right to sell the work generally, but himself retains the copyright and sells only to an individual singer or to the proprietor of a particular theater the right to sing the song or to use the dramatic composition, then nobody has any right to make a public representation or rendition of it except the individual so licensed.

Mr. LACEY. But the amendment covers that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But there is no necessity for it, because the bill as it stands is absolutely correct on that point. There can be no unlawful performance unless it be without the consent of the owner, and if I copyright a song and sell it to dealers to be sold by them over the counter, anybody who purchases it from them buys with it my consent that he use it in any way he may choose, and for profit or otherwise, in his discretion. It is the property of the music dealer, and not my property, as soon as I have sold it to him to put on his shelves. The distinction or by the district attorney. The composer or author would have nothing to do with it. You are invoking here the criminal statutes of the United States and they can be brought to bear by anybody.

Mr. QUIGG. True; but there is always a complaining witness, without whom the law rarely acts. Nobody wants to proceed against Sunday schools, and there is no danger of any such situation arising.

Mr. HULICK. The gentleman says that in his opinion nobody would prosecute a Sunday school, but does the bill permit anybody to do that?

Mr. QUIGG. I hope that the bill permits it. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] says it does not, and perhaps he is right, but I think the law ought to avail to protect the owner at all points. I say that unless you draw the law so strictly that you

The gentleman from New York made another valuable suggest tion—that the owner of a copyright might not want tor art with his rights in such a way as to allow the promiscuous production of his work; he might be unwilling to allow the rendition or the interpretation of his composition by every bungler who might happen to get hold of it. Take the case of the owner of a song—for instance, the song "Lorena," published some years ago, the composition of a poor man who at that time lived in my district—a genius, if ever there was one. He wrote the song, and a great many thousands of dollars were made out of it. But he ought to have had the right, after obtaining his copyright, to withhold that song from public sale, and to give to an artist in the city of Chicago, for instance, the right to sing it on the stage there. Nobody else would have the right to sing a word of that song in public, so tion—that the owner of a copyright might not want tor art with else would have the right to sing a word of that song in public, so long as the exclusive right had been given by the author to that singer.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman allow me a remark right there? The song, "Mamie, come kiss your honey boy," sung right there? The song, "Mamie, come kiss your honey boy," sung by May Irwin, has brought to its author, as I read in the newspapers, $50,000 in the form of royalties.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly. In that way a song may be sung into reputation and popularity all over the United States. But if the owner of the copyright of a song wishes to sell it to the music dealers in Chicago, in California, North and South Dakota, North Carolina, and all the other States, then anyone who buys the song from any one of those dealers buys it with the consent of the owner of the copyright to the public or private performance of the composition for profit or without profit. The distinction which has been made seems to me to be perfectly good. And there is no necessity whatever for the amendment of the gentleman from is no necessity whatever for the amendment of the gentleman from

Mr. LACEY. I ask for a division of the question upon my amendment. The amendment embraces two propositions—first, to strike out that part of the bill which proposes to make the unlawful performance or representation of any dramatic or musical composition a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment. The amendment further proposes to insert new language in place of that which I move to strike out. The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this bill is not on the House Calendar, and is not subject to be called up under the rule.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I present for the consideration of the House the bill (H. R. 1888) to further amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1893, and ask its immediate consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Amend section 15 of said act by substituting the words "of two witnesses" for the words "satisfactory to either of them;" so that the section as amended shall read:

On page 7, line 20, after the word "witnesses," insert "citizens of the District of Columbia."
On page 8, line 1, after the word "witnesses," insert "citizens of the District of Columbia." On page 8, strike out from line 3 to line 18, inclusive.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that the bill which has been read from the Clerk's desk is in no sense a prohibitory bill. The existing law contains very serious defects. Gentlemen are aware that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have recently called attention to some of these very radical defects. The changes which are proposed by this bill are to some extent changes recommended by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I say it is in no sense a prohibitory bill. The defects which this bill proposes to remedy have been developed since the passage of the existing law, in an attempt to enforce that law. I desire to say further that all shades of opinion are represented upon the Committee upon the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. We have friends of prohibition and license and every other view of the matter represented upon that committee. We Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that the other view of the matter represented upon that committee. We had an exhaustive hearing, at which, I think, nearly or quite every member of the committee was present, and this bill is unanimously reported by the committee. I will state, as a specimen of the serious defects of existing law, that a man having a license as a brewer, or the agent of a brewery, may sell strong drink with-out any license whatever. That was undoubtedly a serious over-sight and omission in the drafting of the law as it exists on the statute book.

I repeat once more, that every gentleman who is a member of this House may vote for this bill, if he is in favor of the enforcement of the license law now upon the statute book of the District ment of the license law now upon the statute book of the District of Columbia. As an illustration of what I have said about the glaring defects in the existing law, which is proposed to be remedied by one of the amendments in this bill, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a statement by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I think if gentlemen of the House, whatever their individual opinions may be in regard to the liquor traffic or its suppression will read the report of the committee. traffic or its suppression, will read the report of the committee and the hearing, which are too long to be read here, they will be satisfied that every statement which I have made is correct. I think if members of the House will examine the bill and the report, all those who are in favor of the enforcement of existing law, whatever may be their views on the general question, will readily vote for every provision embodied in the bill.

I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in regard to one of the defects in the existing law.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the report of the Commissioners.] LICENSES AND BREWERIES.

There are four breweries doing business in the District of Columbia and one about to begin operations, besides a score of agencies of foreign breweries engaged in business here, all of which are exempt from license tax by the provisions of section 1 of the act of March 3, 1898, entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," which makes the law inapplicable to sales of intoxicants "by the maker, brewer, or distiller thereof, not to be sold on the premises." This exemption also excepts breweries from the prohibition against Sunday liquor selling. This discrimination in favor of breweries was evidently an inadvertence, but is so unjust and so demoralizing in its tendencies as to require immediate correction. The Commissioners will recommend to Congress at its present session a bill to effect that object.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, if no gentleman desires to be heard,

I will move the previous question.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. On page 7 of your bill there is a provision that no witness shall be excused from testifying in any case brought under this act, and that in case he does testify he shall be exempt from prosecution. Now, I see the committee have proposed an amendment by inserting, after the word "witnesses," the words "citizens of the District of Columbia." Is it proposed to establish one rule for citizens of the District of Columbia who may happen to be witnesses, and another rule for temporary residents of the District of Columbia who may happen to be witnesses?

Mr. MORSE. I do not think that is the intention of the com-

Mr. MOODY. That is the effect of this amendment.
Mr. MORSE. I think the committee will disagree with my colleague in regard to the effect of the amendment.
Mr. MOODY. I should like to have my colleague explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Well, this bill and these amendments were drawn by an organization in this city known as the Anti-Saloon League, and, as before stated, are amendments to existing law to correct defects developed by their efforts to enforce the law; and if my colleague will turn to the report of the remarks of one of if my colleague will turn to the report of the remarks of one of these gentlemen in regard to that amendment, he will find a full and satisfactory explanation. There appeared to be at this point a loophole which allowed a man to escape from testifying, and it appeared necessary to embody this amendment in the law.

Mr. MOODY. I will say to the gentleman that I find no fault with the amendment which is proposed in the bill, and the fault which I have is with the further amendment proposed by the report of the committee, which makes one rule for one who dwells in the District of Columbia and another rule for a temporary resident of the District of Columbia; for instance, one rule by which a member of Congress could claim the privilege of not testifying because his testimony might tend to incriminate him, while that a member of Congress could claim the privilege of not testifying because his testimony might tend to incriminate him, while that same privilege would not apply to a man or woman who lived in the District of Columbia. That is wrong. I should like my colleague to explain to me why any such discrimination is made.

Mr. MORSE. I think the committee understood the words "citizen of the District of Columbia" to mean any man who temporarily or permanently resides in this city, a member of Congress or anybody else. A citizen of the District of Columbia is undoubtedly on a somewhat different basis from citizens of other States and Territories; they do not vote here. I would say for the information of the House that we have some learned legal gentlemen on that committee, one of them the gentleman from New York [Mr. Danlels]; and while I am not a limb of the law myself, I would put that gentleman against any member of the House as an exponent of the law. I believe that gentleman and the other members of the committee thought this amendment was all right, and bers of the committee thought this amendment was all right, and that it would hold water.

Mr. MOODY. I should be glad to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] explain the purpose of that amendment. I refer to the amendment upon page 7 of the bill, which is referred to in the report of the committee.

Mr. DANIELS. I have not the bill here. I have no copy of the

Mr. MOODY. Then I will not ask you to get one. Mr. MORSE. Then, Mr. Speaker, if there be no further questions, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the previous question,

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Vermont to offer an amendment?

Mr. MORSE. I do; but I certainly hope that the distinguished gentleman from Vermont will not offer a prohibitory amendment. I hope he will seek to accomplish that purpose in another bill. This is a bill which should receive the vote of every member of this House, and is not a prohibitory bill.

Mr. POWERS. I think the gentleman will see on the reading of the amendment that it is not in any sense a prohibitory amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. MORSE. I do, sir. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"SECTION 1. On and after March 4, 1897, no person in the District of Columbia shall, by himself, clerk, agent, or servant, sell, furnish, or give away any intoxicating drinks to any other person at any place other than his own dwelling house.

"Sec. 2. Any person violating the provisions of section 1 of this act shall be punished as follows: For the first offense, a fine of $50; for a second offense, a fine of $50 and imprisonment in the District Jail for the term of sixty days; for the third or any subsequent offense, a fine of $100 and imprisonment in the District Jail for the term of one year.

"Sec. 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think the gentleman from Vermont is serious in offering this amendment. Whatever may be the merit of the proposition of the gentleman it should be presented in a separate bill and disposed of in that way. I hope he will not encumber this bill with this amendment. I think that this is a bill that ought to receive the vote of every member of the House, because it simply cures defects in the existing law, some at least of which are recommended by the District Commissioners. It is not a prohibitory bill. If we are to have a bill of that character let us have it in a separate measure, and let the House pass this bill that is presented on the recommendation of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, in which, as before stated, there are representatives of every shade of belief on that question. This is a unanimous report of that committee, as I have already said, to cure defects in the existing law, and I hope the House will not encumber it with such an amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman from Massachusetts has reiterated the statement several times that his bill is not what is known as a prohibitory bill. He lives in a State, as well as I do, and other prominent men, including the Speaker of this House, House, because it simply cures defects in the existing law, some at and other prominent men, including the Speaker of this House, that believes in the principle of prohibition, and that there is no other way of dealing with the liquor traffic but to stamp it out; and if you want to stamp it out you do not want to dally with any license laws; for of all the laws that have ever been invented since the morning and evening stars sang together calculated to permit the liquor traffic, it has been the license laws in force in this country. Now, if you are intent on eradicating this evil, put your foot on it and stamp it out. There is no other way.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, if I can not get a whole loaf I prefer a half loaf to no bread; and if I can make the existing law more stringent and curtail the business, preventing liquor from more stringent and curtail the business, preventing liquor from being sold to minors in saloons, to stop young women from selling drink, and to prevent brewers from keeping a bar without a license, I am in favor of having such amendment made to existing law. That which is sought to be attained by the gentleman from Vermont can only be accomplished by a prohibitory measure. This is a measure of an entirely different character. This is a bill that, as I have already said, ought to receive, and I believe will receive, if left without amendment, the vote of nearly every member of this House who has read the report. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont will be voted down. The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 11, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to make a motion that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. I have been asked whether, if this motion be adopted, it will cut off the evening session for pensions, and I desire to say that it will not. The adjournment will not take place until the end of the evening session.

The SPEAKER. It simply means that when the House adjourns to-day it will adjourn to meet on Monday instead of on Saturday.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 3333) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed finally June 3, 1896; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD FUNDING BILL.

Mr. BELL of Texas, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to file a minority report on the bill H. R. 8189—the Union Pacific Railroad bill.

W. H. WADE.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill for the relief of W. H. Wade, late a captain in the Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.
The SPEAKER. Under the rules that will require unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this a claim? Under the rule all such claims ought to go to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to that committee unless referred to some other committee by unanimous consent.

Mr. TRACEY. This is not, strictly speaking, a claim. It is a bill granting relief from the repayment of money disbursed by Calonal Wade when he was a captain in the Thirty-first Ohio Vol-Colonel Wade when he was a captain in the Thirty-first Ohio Volunteers, the amount not having been credited to him for some technical reason.

Mr. DINGLEY. Well, it is really a claim under the rule. I have no special objection to a change of reference in this particular case, but it seems to me that it is better to adhere to the rule Well, it is really a claim under the rule. I and let all these claims go to the proper committee.

and let all these claims go to the proper committee.

Mr. TRACEY. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. I have conferred with members of the Committee on War Claims, and they tell me that they have agreed not to take up any new bills at this session. This case is a very pressing one, and it is very important to Colonel Wade (who was lately a member of this House) that relief shall be granted at this session. The amount involved is a small one, and the bill is absolutely just. Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty is that if we break over the rule in one instance we shall have to do it in all instances. It seems to me that it is better to live up to the rule and let this bill go to the Committee on War Claims, where I understand it belongs. Otherwise we shall have similar applications in other cases all along the line, and the rule will be broken down.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

MEMORIAL OF MEADE POST, NO. 1, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present in the House and have printed in the RECORD a memorial of Meade Post, No. 1, of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the nature of the gentleman's

Mr. HICKS. That this memorial be read and inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object. I do not object to its being read, but I do object to its being printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 264) providing for the location and purchase of public lands for reservoir sites; and

A bill (S. 2047) extending the time within which the University of Utah shall occupy lands heretofore granted to it. SALE OF LIQUOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Speaker please state, for my information and that of the House, what is the parliamentary situation with reference to H. R. 1888 (entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia"), upon which the House voted before adjournment last evening, and upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mahany] made the point of no quorum? When will it be in order for the House to complete the vote?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order the next time the committees are called in pursuance of the rule under which the matter came up, with this possible exception: There is a special order pending on a bill presented by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers], which may turn out to have the right of way; but the Chair will not undertake to decide that question now.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HULL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for the Committee on Military Affairs to continue in session this afternoon during the session of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, this being Friday, and learning from conference with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DING-LEY] and others that there is no public business demanding urgent attention, if no one else makes the motion, I desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please withhold that motion for a few minutes, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Evans] desires to present a matter from the Committee on Ways and Means.

and Means.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will do so.

ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means has had under consideration the Senate joint resolution to extend the time for the joint select commission on the use of alcohol free of tax in the arts to make its report, and has authorized a

The cor tax in the arts to make its report, and has authorized a favorable report upon the resolution, with some amendments.

The Senate passed a joint resolution of precisely the same tenor as that offered in the House. I ask that the Senate resolution be taken up and passed by the House in lieu of the resolution reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 162) continuing in force section 2 of the act approved June 3, 1896, entitled "An act to repeal section 61 of 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" which became a law August 28, 1894.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the provisions of section 2 of the act approved June 3, 1896, entitled "An act to repeal section 61 of 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" which became a law August 28, 1894, be, and they are hereby, continued in force, and the joint select committee heretofore appointed under said section shall, when they have reached a final conclusion, report the same to Congress, together with such information as they shall have obtained.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, is there a report

The SPEAKER. This joint resolution has not been reported by the committee. It is now in charge of the committee. It will require unanimous consent to discharge the committee and bring

Mr. DINGLEY. This is a Senate resolution, I understand.
The SPEAKER. A Senate resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DINGLEY. I took it for granted that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Evans] intended to have the Senate resolution, as laid before the House, taken up and acted on, as the Committee on Ways and Means has favorably reported a bill identical in its terms with this. I should like to have the order referring the Senate resolution vacated, in order that the resolution may be considered now.

The SPEAKER. As that would require unanimous consent, that consent might as well cover all the points.

Mr. DINGLEY. This resolution, as I understand, simply extends the time within which a report may be made to Congress by the commission appointed to consider the subject of the rebate of taxation on alcohol used in arts and manufactures. osition, I understand, is to extend the time for making the report until the close of this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not like to object, but I wish my colleague [Mr. Evans] would make some explanation. I was unable to hear that of the gentleman from Maine [Mr.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, then, there is no objection to the present consideration of the Senate resolution.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I do not intend to object.

Mr. EVANS. The joint resolution simply extends the time for the making of the report of this commission, so that the report may be made at any time before the close of the present session.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Then I do not object.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the Senate joint resolution to a third reading.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, is this the stage for offering amend-

The SPEAKER. Now is the time for consideration of amendments.

Mr. EVANS. Then, under the instruction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I offer two amendments to this resolution. These amendments, which are embraced in the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, are intended simply to make it clear that the extension of time shall be limited to this Congress. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 9, after the word "force," the words "until March 3, 1897." Insert in line 11, after the word "to," the words "the present."

The question was taken on the amendments; and they were agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now renew my motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order would be the closing

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order would be the closin of the unfinished business which belongs to this day.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thought that had been done.

The SPEAKER. It has not been.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to interfere with that.

The SPEAKER. There is some unfinished pension business.

HELEN M. MALLERY.

The bill (S. 724) granting an increase of pension to Helen M. Mallery was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Helen M. Mallery, widow of Garrick Mallery, late captain and brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army and lieutenant-colonel Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry and brevet colonel United States Volunteers, to $50 per month, and pay her a pension hereafter at that rate.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

HANNAH R. QUINT.

The bill (H. R. 6792) granting a pension to Hannah R. Quint was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Hannah R. Quint, widow of Brian W. Fletcher, late of Company B, Fourth Maine Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the engrossed copy of the bill produced in this case.

The SPEAKER. Then the matter must lie over. The Chair is informed that the bill has not been engrossed.

ELVIRA BACHELDER.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Clerk's desk a bill on the Private Calendar (S. 3245) granting a pension to Elvira Bachelder.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 a month, the name of Elvira Bachelder, dependent mother of J. K. P. Bachelder, late a private in Company D, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he submitted the matter to the House because he was informed that it was a case where the President had vetoed a bill on the ground of a misdescription of person, although acknowledging the propriety of the action on the part of Congress.

Mr. ERDMAN. Under the circumstances, I withdraw the objection.

So, there being no further objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I now renew my motion, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

PETER COOK.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 2741) for the relief of Peter Cook, of Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Peter Cook, of Lonoke County, Ark., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $504, being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be due to him as a loyal citizen for stores and supplies taken and used by the Federal Army during the late

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to ask whoever has charge of this bill if it was ever presented to the proper authorities for adjudication?

Mr. McRAE. I am not able to answer the question of the gentleman. The report accompanying the bill discloses all the information that I have in reference to the matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. The report does not state; but ordinarily it would be expected that such claims should be presented to the

Mr. DINGLEY. The report does not state; but ordinarily it would be expected that such claims should be presented to the accounting officers.

Mr. McRAE. It was presented to the Court of Claims, and the bill carries only the amount allowed by the court.

Mr. DINGLEY. But these claims should have been presented to the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. McRAE. The bill was the basis of discussion for two hours or more during the last session of Congress, and I heard no objection to it then. I have no personal knowledge of the facts except that which I gathered in the reading of the report and from that discussion. The claimant lives in the district represented by my colleague, General Nelle, who is unavoidably absent. He made the report, and is familiar with all the facts. After hearing the discussion, however, during the last session I am convinced that the bill is a proper one and ought to pass.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill has been discussed, as I understand the gentleman, in the House?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; in the Committee of the Whole House for several hours during the last session.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not appear to have been presented to the Quartermaster-General and either rejected or allowed.

Mr. McRAE. I do not know about that. I do not think it was presented, although I have no information on that point. I move that the leid exide with a favorable recommendation.

presented, although I have no information on that point. I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

AUGUSTUS P. BURDITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Augustus P. Burditt, of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, surviving partner of the late firm of Burditt & Fisk, the sum of $5,130, being for the services of the steamboat Mattie, owned by said firm of Burditt & Fisk, and used in the military service of the United States from the 5th day of January, in the year 1865, to the 31st day of January, in said year 1865, both days inclusive, at the rate of $190 a day, as found by the Court of Claims in its finding of facts dated the 9th day of June, 1890, House Miscellaneous Document No. 230, Fifty-first Congress, first session.

Mr. OTJEN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. OTJEN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 180) for the relief of Augustus P. Burditt, submit the following report:

This claim was presented to the Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-third Congress, and was favorably reported upon by that committee. A careful examination of the facts involved brings your committee to the same conclusion as that reached by the committee of the last House. A copy of said report is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 510, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4530) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt, respectfully report as follows:

This bill was before this committee in the last Congress, and the committee adopted the report then made, which is as follows:

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 668) for the relief of Augustus P. Burditt, submit the following report:

"This measure was considered by this committee in the Fifty-first Congress, and was reported upon favorably, which report is appended as a part of this report.

"Your committee concur in the conclusions stated in that report and recommend the passage of the bill."

[House Report No. 3172, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 12008) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt, having considered the same, respectfully report as follows:
That this is a claim by the surviving member of a partnership consisting of the claimant, Augustus P. Burditt, and one James Fisk, since deceased, both of whom are found to be loyal to the United States during the late rebellion, for the use of a steamboat called the Mattie, under military anthority, for the use of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, from the 5th to the 31st of January, 1865, inclusive, amounting to twenty-seven days.

It is found by the Court of Claims that the steamboat was duly impressed into the service of the United States; that she was used for the period for which payment is claimed, and that her services were worth the sum of $190 a day, amounting to the sum of $5,130. The findings of the Court of Claims are hereto annexed. Your committee therefore report back the bill (H. R. 12008) favorably and recommend its passage.

A copy of the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt against the United States, transmitted by the clerk of said court.

COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 17, 1890.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS, Chief Clerk Court of Claims.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

(Court of Claims, term of 1889-90. Congressional, No. 348. Augustus P. Burditt vs. The United States.)

The claim or matter in the above-entitled case was transmitted to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives the 27th day of February, 1885.

Leon D. Geneste appeared for claimant, and the Attorney-General, by J. W. Rannells, esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The case having been brought to a hearing the 15th day of May, 1890, the court, upon the evidence and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, find the facts to be as follows:

The claimant resided in Massachusetts until 1852, when he took up his residence at Olive Branch, De Soto County, Miss., and in 1859 changed his residence to Memphis, Tenn., where he resided until the close of the war. He now resides in Boston, Mass.

In the years 1854 and 1855 the claimant, Angustus P. Burditt, and one James Fisk, since deceased, were in partnership and owned a steamboat called the Mattie, of 149 tons burden, and of which Matt. A. Glass was master, and which was enrolled, as shown in the following certificate:

UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSE, Memphis, Tenn., February 16, 1870.

I hereby certify that the steamer Mattie, of 149 tons burden, was enrolled and licensed for the coasting trade in this office, as appears of record, by G. N. Carlton, surveyor, on the 24th day of May, A. D. 1864, as per enrollment No. 49, permanent, owned by A. P. Burditt and James Fisk, of Memphis, one-half each, and regularly cleared and permitted by competent authority under the Treasury regulations made in compliance with existing laws at that time for the regulation of the coasting trade between the United States and the States in rebellion.

Witness my hand and seal of office, day and date above written.

B. C. TRADER,
Surveyor of Customs.

November 18, 1864, the said steamboat was seized by Capt. C. H. Gaubert, an assistant quartermaster of the United States Army, for the military service at the port of St. Louis, Mo., where she was then in use by her owners, and was used by the military authorities of the United States to transport army stores to Little Rock and Devalls Bluff, the latter on White River, Arkansas. During her trip to Devalls Bluff her main shaft broke, and when she reached Devalls Bluff her cargo was unloaded and she was released from the service of the United States on the 4th day of January, 1865.

January 7, 1865, a new shaft having been put into said steamboat, she was again seized by an officer of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, at Devalls Bluff, and used in the transportation of army stores from that date until the 22d of January, 1865, when she was again discharged from the service of the United States at said Devalls Bluff.

It would have taken her at least nine days, or until the 31st of January, 1865, to return to St. Louis, Mo., where she had originally been taken.

The captain and crew were paid during all the time of the impressment by the owners of the steamboat.

III.

No payment has been made for the services of said steamboat from the 5th day of January, 1865, to 31st day of January, 1865. A reasonable value of the aforesaid services of said boat and crew would be the sum of $190 a day, an amount which had previously been paid for the boat by the Quartermaster's Department. The cost of running the boat to the owners was $175 per day. The accounting officers of the Treasury disallowed this claim, holding that they had no jurisdiction, on the ground that the impressment had occurred in an insurrectionary State.

IV.

Augustus P. Burditt, the claimant, and James Fisk, his partner, were loyal to the United States during the late rebellion.
Filed June 9, 1890.

ARCHIBALD HOPKINS, Chief Clerk Court of Claims

The committee, therefore, report back the bill (H. R. 4530) and recommend that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on reporting the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if there is anyone here who knows anything further about this case than what is contained in the report?

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I reported that bill. It is a bill to pay a claim for the use of the steamer Mattie for twenty-seven days' services.

On November 27, 1864, the steamer Mattie was at St. Louis, and there she was seized by the Government to transport army stores to Little Rock, Ark. On January 4 she broke her shaft, and was released. The shaft was repaired in two days, and on the 7th day of January she was again seized and used from January 7 to January 22 in transporting army stores for the Government. It would have taken the boat nine days to get back to St. Louis, where she was originally seized. For the use of these twenty-seven days for which this claim is made the owners of the boat paid for running her, and the amount which they paid was found by the Court of Claims to be $175 a day. The Court of Claims found that both claimants were loyal. There is no question about the use of the boat for twenty-seven days, and the charge of $190 a day seems to be reasonable. I think the bill is just, and it seems to me that it should pas

Mr. LOUD, I should like to ask the gentleman why this was not paid for by the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. OTJEN. The Quartermaster's Department did not pay because she was seized in an insurrectionary State.

Mr. LOUD. Seized in the city of St. Louis, which was not in a state of insurrection at that time.

Mr. OTJEN. No: she was originally seized at St. Louis, and used until the 4th of January, 1865. Then she was released, and for all that time the Government paid the owners of the boat $190 a day; but for the time after that, from the 7th day of January to the 31st day of January, she having been seized in the State of Arkansas, they have had no pay.

Mr. LOUD. Where was she seized the second time?

Mr. OTJEN. At Devalls Bluff.

Mr. LOUD. What was she doing there?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. OTJEN. Mr. OTJEN. She was taking a load of army munitions and stores to Devalls Bluff, and unloaded there. That is where her shaft broke. Then she was released for two days, and seized again. Mr. LOUD. Was she taking these munitions for the Southern Confederacy Mr. OTJEN. No; she was in the service of the Government of the United States, seized by the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. LOUD. How was she in an insurrectionary port, I should like to ask? Mr. OTJEN. The State of Arkansas was in rebellion at that Mr. LOUD. Well, she must have been taken at some place where the United States authorities had full control, and I think the Quartermaster's Department were perfectly authorized to hire this boat.

Mr. OTJEN. I have stated the reason given by the Quarter-

Mr. Olden. I have stated the reason given by the Quarter-master's Department for not paying the claim.

Mr. LOUD. Of course, at this distance from 1865 it is pretty hard to determine the real facts of the case. Probably if the real facts of the case could have been presented to the mind of the gentleman who made the report, he might have made a different report; but the fact remains, nevertheless, that $190 a day for a little teamers of 100 team hyrden is a restricted when size. little steamer of 140 tons burden is a pretty steep price. I should like to furnish the gentleman with all the steamboats that he or anybody else would want for one-half that sum.

Mr. OTJEN. It does not seem to me that $190 a day is an exorbitant price, in view of the fact that the owners of the boat paid $175 a day for the running expenses, so they only get $15 a day for the use of their boat.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to say that the facts, as they appear to the gentleman at present, did not perhaps appear at that time. Four men are all that are necessary to manage a boat of 140 tons burden, and how they could have managed to pay $175 a day for the running expenses is something that I can not understand; neither could the gentleman probably understand it, if he knew the full, true facts of the case

Mr. OTJEN. I will say to the gentleman that the Court of Claims found these to be the facts. They have investigated the

The bill was read at length.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate bill No. 90, Calendar number, 470, be substituted in place of this bill. It is the same subject-matter.

The motion was agreed to. The Senate bill is as follows:

He senate bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William P. Buckmaster, surviving partner of James Murphy & Co., late of New York City, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $22,386.61, the same being a balance due for labor and material furnished by James Murphy & Co. in the construction of the machinery for the double-ender vessel Otsego in 1862 and 1863, as per report of a board of officers organized by the Secretary of the Navy in pursuance of a resolution of the United States Senate, adopted March 9, 1865.

Mr. OTJEN. I ask for the reading of the report. Mr. LOUD. I would like to have the report read, Mr. Chairman. The Clerk proceeded to read the report on the Senate bill, as

Mr. Peffer, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 224:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill S. 224, being a bill for the relief of William P. Buckmaster, the surviving partner of the late firm of James Murphy & Co., Fulton Iron Works, New York City, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

This claim is for the difference between the actual cost and the sum allowed and paid by the Government to James Murphy & Co., amounting to $22.386 61 and interest thereon, for constructing the engine and boller of the U. S. S. Ostego in 1862-63. The facts are fully set forth in the following affidavits and statements:

"William P. Buckmaster, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at No. 919 Olive street, in the city of St. Louis. I was one of the proprietors of the Fulton Iron Works, carried on under the firm name of James Murphy & Co., successors to Pease & Murphy, since 1856, and am now the only surviving partner of that firm. "In 1862 we completed the engines and boilers for the first war vessel that was built under President Lincoln's Administration, viz, the United States sloop of war Oneida, and during this year we had more work than we could do by the day without taking contracts. In August of this year Mr. B. F. Isherwood, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, came to our office to induce us to take two contracts for the machinery of double-enders. Many of these vessels were then under contract. He told Mr. Murphy, one of the firm, how difficult it was to get the machine shops to take the contracts for the machinery ready to put in the vessels as soon as they were launched. He had no drawings to show, but said the engines were of such a description, and he did not believe they would cost more than double those of a Staten Island ferryboat. Mr. Murphy told him he did not want any contracts, that material and labor were increasing in price every week, and besides he was crowded with work. Mr. Isherwood said, 'You must take one set to help the Government out.'

"Mr. Murphy then sent for the foreman of the machine shop, Isaac S. Lauback, and asked him if he thought he could build the engines in the time mentioned by Mr. Isherwood. Lauback said, 'I would like to see the drawings.'

Mr. Isherwood said, 'They are not completed, but it will be double the work of a ferryboat's engine and boiler.' Lauback said he could do it if he could get the drawings at once. Mr. Isherwood then addressed himself to Mr. Murphy and said, 'You can't lose any money on one set at $22,000. I have contracted for the machinery of several of these vessels at the price named.' Murphy replied, 'I don't like to go it blind on a job of such magnitude.' Mr. Isherwood said, 'You don't go it blind. I tell you that this engine and boiler for the U.S. S. Otsego will not weigh more than double the weight of the would much rather contribute same, as I can be a server at my own price without taking any contracts."

"Our claim for the excess of cost beyond the contract price is based on these grounds:

"First. There were no drawings from which we could make an approximate estimate as to the cost of this machinery.

"Second. The Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, acting for the honorable Secretary of the Navy, insisted that we should build the machinery for the U. S. S. Otsego because the necessities of the Government demanded it.

"Third. The comparison he presented between engines and boilers we had constructed and this machinery for the Otsego. He said it would not be more than double the price. It proved incorrect, as it was much greater.

"Fourth. The delay in furnishing the drawings subjected us to a loss of at least 15 per cent, that being about the amount of the advance of material and labor before we could do anything with the work in the absence of drawings. I will also state that in making up the cost of the Otsego's machinery, that all the charges are for actual labor and material. We included no office expenses, no charge for rent while the work was being done, or any other charge except as above stated. That we did not take any contracts from private individuals, and would not have taken this one from the Government except to aid it as far as we could at the sacrifice of profit to ourselves. The conversation between Mr. Isherwood and James Murphy, my partner, is taken from a memorandum made by me at the time contract was agreed to in my presence at our office. I made it, as we had never before entered into a contract without making an estimate of the cost of the work from drawings and specifications on which we were invited to bid.

"Fifth. Before we commenced work on the contract we wrote to Mr. B. F. Isherwood that we would not do any work unless we were protected against loss, and inclosed a contract in that letter, a completed document, so there might not be any delay if he chose to accept our ter

I built the engines for three steamboats for the Staten Island Ferry Company and knew the cost of such work and the price for each engine and boiler erected on one of these boats. It was from $31,000 to $33,000 all completed ready for steam. After Mr. Murphy told me he had made a contract for the Otsego engine and boilers it was more than six weeks before I saw any drawings. There was more than three times the work on the Otsego engine and four times the work on the boilers than there was on the engine and boiler of a Staten Island ferryboat mentioned by Mr. Isherwood. "EDWARD F. REILLY, Clerk."

From the foregoing affidavits and other evidence it appears that the firm of James Murphy & Co., consisting of James Murphy, William P. Buckmaster, and William J. Pease, proprietors of the Fulton Iron Works, of New York, entered into a contract, under date of August 15, 1862, with B. F. Isherwood, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering of the Navy Department, "to build and erect at their own expense and risk, in a secure and finished state, fit in every respect for sea service, in the U. S. S. Otsego, at the city of New York, all the machinery necessary for the propulsion of the same by an overhanging paddle wheel," for the sum of $82,000.

The evidence shows that the said James Mupphy & Co. did not make any bid for the construction of this machinery. They knew nothing about it until Mr. Isherwood, then Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, came into their office in the city of New York to induce them to take a contract; and Mr. Isherwood states in his testimony that it was of vital importance to the Government to have machinery ready when the vessels then under construction were launched. Mr. Isherwood went to New York for the express purpose of inducing the machine shops to take these contracts, and demanded that Murphy & Co. should take at least one to help the Government. It was through his representations alone as to the value of the work that they consented to build one set of this machinery.

The evidence shows that the firm of James Murphy & Co. refused in August, 18&2, to enter into a contract with the Navy Department to furnish the machinery for the U.S. S. Otsego, but was finally persuaded to do so on the assurance of said Isherwood, the contracting agent of the Navy Department, that the engines and boilers would not cost more than double those of a Staten Island ferry boat, and that the firm should promptly have the drawings and should be paid for the loss of actual labor and material over $2,000, the contract price.

By reference to the investigations and findings of the Seifridge board, as stated in their report, it is seen that at the time Mr. Isherwood, in behalf of the Navy Department, made chis contracts with said James Murphy & Co. for the engines and boilers of the Otsego the Navy Department made contracts for Is double-enders, for machinery for 22 double-enders, for 6 harbor and river monitors, with their machinery, for 1 iron double-ender, and for the ironclad Miantonomoh, in the months of August, September, and October, 1862; and for 5 double-enders in June, July, and August, 1833; for 3 iron tug-boats in December, 1863; for the ironclad Onondaga, the ironclad propellers Miwaukee and Winnebago in May, and the monitor Comanche in June, 1862, and for the monitor Naubuc in April, 1863 Besides, during the period appointed for the construction of this work the Department had many other heavy jobs in its own yards and in the shops of s

"DEAR SIR: We inclose contract for the Otsego's machinery, which we have executed this day. We are still without any drawings, aithough the contract is dated August 15. Since that time labor and materials have advanced at least 15 per cent. This will enhance the cost of the work. The exigency of the situation is the only reason we accept the contract, but before we begin the work we must be assured that we will be protected against actual loss.

Mr. Isherwood, the Government agent, in his letter of September 10, 1802, acknowledges receipt of the contract, and assures said Murphy & Co. that they should be protected against loss on account of the advancing price of labor and materials, occasioned by the failure of the Government to furnish the plans and specifications as at first agreed upon.

Said Murphy & Co. would do no work until they were protected against loss, thus making the delivery of the contract conditional until an amendment to the contract was accepted by the Department. It was accepted by Mr. Isherwood's letter of September 10, 1862, directing them to push the work as fast as possible, and also stating that the Department would allow loss on labor and material in excess of the contract price. The original letter of Mr. Isherwood acknowledging receipt of the contract is on file with the papers in this case, and reads as follows:

"Washington, D. C., September 10, 1862.

"James Murphy & Co.,
"Fulton Iron Works, New York:
"Your letter of the 5th received. I will send a portion of the drawings in a few days. Push the work forward as fast as possible.
"The Department will allow actual loss on labor and material used in the Otsego's machinery in excess of the contract price.
"B. F. ISHERWOOD."

Said Murphy & Co. claimed and regarded these two letters as much a part of the contract as if they had been embodied in the contract itself. It was desired to save time, as that was of paramount importance. Said Isherwood at this time was Engineer-in-Chief of the United States Navy, as well as Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering. While in these positions, 1862 to 1871, he made contracts for the Navy Department. Payment made by the Government on such contracts acknowledged his authority to make them. The contractors for the machinery and hulls of the double-ender gunboats contracted for in the years 1862 and 1863 applied to Congress for an additional allowance over the contract price paid therefor by the Navy Department, and a board of officers was appointed to examine their claims, under the following resolution, passed in the Senate March 9, 1865.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organized board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price, and the allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session, none but those who have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered."

Under said resolution the honorable Secretary of the Navy appointed a board, consisting of Commodore Thomas O. Selfridge, Chief Engineer Alexander Henderson, and Paymaster C. H. Eldridge, which convened at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard June 5, 1865, and continued in session for more than six months.

Among the contractors who had been notified by the board organized under months.

Among the contractors who had been notified by the board organized under the resolution above cited to appear before it for the purpose of testifying as to their claims to additional compensation for the work performed, Mr. William P. Buckmaster, one of the firm of James Murphy & Co., presented himself before the board and testified, under oath, as follows:

"The contract (for the machinery of the double-ender Otsego) was dated by the Navy Department August 15, 1862, in which [seven months] was allowed to complete the machinery and deliver to the Government; but it was not so delivered until June, 1864. That he was released by the Department from the terms of the contract regarding time of completion, as shown by the letter attached to the bill presented. That the total cost of the machinery was $104.836.61, and the amount received from Government, the contract price, was $82,000, leaving a balance, the excess of loss to them over and above the contract price, of $22.836.61. That there are no bills for extra work, and that there are no charges in the bill annexed to this record, marked No. 36, for any condemned material, faulty workmanship, or rebracing of boilers; and that the bill shows the actual cost of labor and material. That the excess of cost is due to the rise in the price of labor and material, and also when the contract was taken it was represented by Mr. Isherwood that he considered it a fair price, urging us to accept it, as it was difficult to get the work, and it might exempt our men from being drafted. He also stated that the weight of the machinery would not exceed that of the Paul Jones class, while it did exceed it by one-third; no drawings or plans being shown at the time the contract was made, we could only judge of the cost by comparing it with engines and boilers of the same size, cylinder, and stroke of piston that we had built for river boats, but found it was more than double."

"The board, after a critical examination of all the claims presented the board made the following report:

"The board, after a critical examination of the bill of cost presented by the several contractors for vessels and steam machinery contracted for in the years 1862 and 1863, who have appeared and made sworn statements, has determined the excess of cost in the several cases over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work to be as follows:

Subsequently, by authority of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1867, another board of officers was appointed by the Department "to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of war and steam machinery for the same under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861," and its report was communicated to Congress December 4, 1867. The claim of the Fulton Iron Works does not appear to have been presented to this board for examination.

That the claimants were losers on this contract to an amount nearly, if not quite, equal to one-half of the whole contract there can be but little doubt, as were most if not all of the contractors engaged in the construction of the twenty-seven gunboats mentioned in the report of the Selfridge board. These contracts were entered into in abnormal times. War was raging, it is true, but many were the predictions then made, by some of our ablest statesmen, that it could not and would not last more than a few months at most. Those who, gifted with the greatest prescience, could not and did not predict as to the future with any degree of accuracy, and few there were, indeed, who, in August, 1862, the date when these contracts were entered into, could have been made to believe that nearly three years from that date would find the war still raging with unabated fury, millions of men still in arms, and prices of all kinds of labor, materials, and provisions doubled or trebled in amount.

In discussing this very claim, and others of like character. Senater Summer the war still raging with unabated fury, millions of men still in arms, and prices of all kinds of labor, materials, and provisions doubled or trebled in amount.

In discussing this very claim, and others of like character, Senator Sumner (see Congressional Globe, 1865, page 1892) said:

"The Senator from Kentucky said that they took the war into their calculations. Perhaps they did; but who among those contractors could take that war adequately into his calculations? Who among those sitting here or at the other end of the Avenue properly appreciated the character of the great contest that was then going on? Sir, we had passed half a century in peace; we knew nothing of war or of war preparations, when all at once we were called to efforts on this gigantic scale. Are you astonished that these contractors as gentle in judgment and as considerate as you have been to others in public life who have erred in their calculations with regard to it.—Congressional Globe, page 1987.

"The building of that invulnerable Navy was one of the great victories of the war, not to be commemorated on any special field, but to be seen in those mighty results which we all now enjoy.

"And now again I ask, Are you ready to see these contractors who have done this service sacrificed? You do not allow the soldier to be sacrificed, nor the national creditor who has taken your stock; will you allow the mechanic to be sacrificed? * * * My friend on my right [Mr. Nye] asked you to be magnanimous to these contractors. I do not put it in that way. I ask you simply to be just. Do by them as you would be done by. The Senator from Nevada also very fitly reminded you of the experience of other countries. He told you that England, at the close of the Crimean war, when her mechanics had suffered precisely as your mechanics have suffered, din ot allow them to be sacrificed, but every pound and shilling of their liabilities under their contracts was promptly met by that Government. Will you be less just to your mechanics than England? It is an old sa monarchy in gratitude to those who served it."—Congressional Globe, page 1987.

During the same debate Senator Hendricks, of Indiana (see Congressional Globe, page 994, 1865), said:

"I am of the opinion that these sums ought to be paid, as a matter of justice and right, by the Government to these contractors. Each case, of course, has its special merits or demerits. But, sir, I believe in the doctrine that where a man contracts to do a great and very important work for the Government he ought not to be allowed to be a large loser, and in some cases, as will be the result here, to be broken up by the contract that he may have made, and especially in the case of contracts made at such a time as these were made and for such work as they were made. * * * We had to have these ships; the Government could not progress in the war without them, and great numbers had to be manufactured or contracted for about the same time. What was the effect of that? The Government made a contract with one man, then with another, then with another, and started her own shipyards with all the force it was possible to command. What was the effect of that? Of course, to increase the price of labor; of course, to increase the price of material required in the construction of the ships. There are some general views about the equity of these claims without reference to the particular merit of each case.—Congressional Globe, page 1892, 1863.

"The point is that, these contracts being made in 1862 and 1863, the prices continued to advance during all the time that these parties were building the vessels and constructing the machinery for them, so that they were overtaken by this enormously high rate of prices and destroyed.—Congressional Globe, page 1892.

"These contracts were made by some below their own propositions, and at barely fair prices at the then current rates. Is there any Senator here who wishes to see these men broken up merely because they entered into a contract with the Government? Is there any Senator here who whise to say to these men, We have your bond, and we will have the pound of feast?"—Contract with the Government? Is there any Senator here who whise to say to these men, We have your bond, and we will have the pound of feast?"—Contract with the Government? Is there any Senator here you will take the blood out of your business; we will have the pound of feast?"—Contract with the Government in the pound of feast?"—Contract with the government of the Marchand board, and the reasont contract the theorem of the Marchand board, and the reasont contract with the contract of the contra tained by them in constructing the Comanche. Amount allowed by the board, $179,993.80.

In addition, the following special acts have been passed to relieve contractors in similar cases, to wit:

Act of February 18, 1873, to relieve the heirs of George C. Bester, $125,000. (17 Stats., 733.)

Act of June 1, 1872, to pay Charles W. Whitney $50,000. (17 Stats., 671.)

Act of June 10, 1872, to pay J. S. Underhill $23,310.75. (17 Stats., 691.)

Act of March 2, 1875, to pay Daniel S. Mershon, jr., $46,715.08. (18 Stats., 635.)

The contractors for building the Dome of the Capitol were awarded and paid $96,000 for increase in the price of labor and material during its construction. The Government prolonged the time of its completion. (See Senate Report No. 132, first session Thirty-ninth Congress.)

John Ericsson was paid $1,070,488.30 on the Puritan (United States Statutes, June 25, 1864, volume 13, 409) for increased cost of labor and materials.

Miles Greenwood, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was paid $76,000 for increased cost of labor and material in building the United States vessel Tippecanoe, in 1873.

This claim has merit in the fact that before Murphy & Co. would accept said contract and proceed with the work they required Mr. Isherwood, the contracting agent of the Navy Department, to agree in writing to pay any excess of cost of labor and material over the contract price, thus imposing upon the United States a legal liability, the amount of which, under the resolution of the Senate, has been fixed and determined.

This claim has been before Congress several times. It was introduced in both House's in the Fifty-first Congress and referred to appropriate committees, but no further action was taken. The House Committee on War Claims at the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, the claim was referred to this committee, but no action was had on it.

Your committee have given the matter careful consideration, and have arrived at the conclusion that the claim is just and ought to be paid. We are not willing to advise by the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is the Committee of the Whole. I want to see if I can have the attention of the gentleman in charge of this bill. Who is in charge of the bill?

Mr. OTJEN. I made the report on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I have been trying to refresh my recollection about this claim. I have not fully succeeded in doing so, although I have partially done so. On a former examination I came to the condition that the decide method is the tenth of the condition of the conditio conclusion that the claim ought not to be paid, and that conclusion is reenforced this morning by a hasty examination. I understand this is briefly the fact: During the war contracts were made for the construction of vessels; that changes were made in some of these contracts; that there was an advance in the cost of material under some of these contracts; and at the close of the war a claim was made before the Senate of the United States, priwar a claim was made before the Senate of the United States, primarily, that compensation should be made for extras upon the one hand, but more particularly for the advance in the price of material between the time of the making of the contract and the time of the completion thereof. The Senate passed a resolution which I have in my hand. I will read it.

March 9, 1865, the Senate adopted the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862-63 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session.

That resolution was adopted. The Secretary of the Navy appointed a board known as the Selfridge board. The Selfridge board, under that resolution and appointment, made investigations and reported to the Senate, and under that report the parties seeking relief here had an award made substantially of the amount that they ask to be appropriated. But the Selfridge board was overthrown, and for the reason that under our Constitution the House must concur with the Senate and the President agree with House must concur with the Senate and the President agree with each before legislation can be had or appropriation made. The matter came before the House, and finally it came into conference, and there was legislation to this end. The House Committee on Claims unanimously rejected this bill, which was to pay the findings of the Selfridge board, upon the ground that while certain of these contractors would receive the amount of their claim, and in some cases more, other contractors would receive less than the amount of their losses, and that consequently the Senate bill was not an equitable basis of relief. It therefore reported a substitute for the Senate bill, and the conference committee finally agreed upon a bill, which became the act of March 2, 1867. I have that act before me. I call attention of the committee to it. It pro-

That the Secretary of the Navy shall create a board to investigate the claims of—

Who?

all contractors for building vessels of war and steam machinery for the same under contracts made after the 1st day of May, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1864, and said investigation to be made upon the following basis: He shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by each contractor in the completion of his work by reason of changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required—

Pretty broad, you will notice. Second-and delays in the construction of the work occasioned by the Government which were not provided for in the original contract.

A second pretty broad ground. Third-

But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor.

Now, as I understand it, this is a claim of these parties to be reimbursed for the advance in the cost of materials used in complying with their contract before the contract expired. Am I

mr. OTJEN. Partially so; not altogether.
Mr. CANNON. I am partially right. Well, that is one element of the compensation sought. Another is a claim for extras. Am I correct in that?

Mr. OTJEN. There are no extras, as I understand it, in this

Mr. CANNON. Well, for changes. Mr. OTJEN. No changes; merely compensation for the actual cost of labor and materials.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. Now, the law—not the Senate resolution, but the law—provides that the investigations of this board shall cover changes in plans, extras, etc., which were not provided for in the original contract. I will read this again, because it goes right to the core of the whole question in this case, as I understand it:

But no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or materials shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged time for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government aforesaid, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractor.

Now, it would seem to be manifestly just that a contractor enter ing into a contract for the Government should be compensated for extras and for the dangers resulting from the Government changing the plans of the work, and thus necessitating extra time for its completion, and in 1867, when this whole subject-matter was fresh in the minds of the people and of Congress, a law was enacted creating this board, and in fact, if not in words, turning down the

Mr. OTJEN. Do I understand you to say that this claim was presented to the Marchand board?
Mr. CANNON. I do not know.
Mr. OTJEN. I understand that it was not presented to that board.

Mr. CANNON. Ah, then, these parties were guilty of laches and the intendment should be against them, because their claim and the intendment should be against them, because their claim was presented to the Selfridge board, as appears upon the face of the papers. The claim was presented to the Selfridge board and $20,000 was found to be due by that board, and the Senate passed a bill appropriating the money, but the House, under the lead of its Committee on Claims, refused to concur, and what was the result? The result was the creation of a new board by law—by a law which said that-

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to investigate the claims of all contractors for building vessels of war.

Now, I do not know what the records of a generation ago might show upon full examination. They might show that this claim was presented to this new board created by law; but if they should not show that, and if the claim was not in fact presented to that board, then the presumption is that when the whole matter was fresh in the minds of the people and of Congress these parties knew that they had no claim that could pass muster, and so did not present their claim.

knew that they had no claim that could pass muster, and so did not present their claim.

Mr. FOOTE. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly, if I am competent to answer it.

Mr. FOOTE. As to the Selfridge board, was there ever any question raised as to the competency of that board?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know, nor do I care, whether that board was competent or incompetent. I do know that it breathed life only through a Senate resolution, that it found that these claimants had the money due them which you are now seeking to claimants had the money due them which you are now seeking to appropriate, but that the House and the Senate, on consideration of the findings of that board, and on consideration of this particular claim, repudiated those findings and wrote a law upon the statute book for the settlement of all these claims, and that under that law these men took nothing.

Mr. FOOTE. Was not that merely because of a technicality? If the Selfridge board was a competent board and made a finding in favor of these claimants, then the claim must have been

Mr. CANNON. A mere technicality! Why, Mr. John K. Cowen and several other eminent Baltimore and Philadelphia lawyers are probably as competent as any of the judges of the Supreme Court, but they are not judges of the Supreme Court, and the gentleman might as well cite an opinion given by one of them as legal authority as to claim that the action of the Selfridge board in this case is binding because the members of that board were competent. Whatever may have been their competency or their incompetency, their action was without authority of law. Their finding was not binding upon anybody, and that finding was repudiated by Congress in 1867, when this whole subject was fresh, under the lead of the Committee on Claims of the House, and legislation was had constituting the Marchand board, which had plenary jurisdiction of this whole subject. That board found a great amount of damages in a great many cases, but the names of these claimants are not found written upon this "book of life," these claimants are not found written upon this "book of life," which exists by virtue of law; but now, a generation afterwards, when the people have forgotten all about the matter, these claimants come in with a report reciting the arguments of Charles Sumner and of Senator Nye, of Nevada, both of whom died many years ago, talking in magnificent and patriotic style about "compensating labor" and giving it its "just dues." Splendid talk, but it cuts no ice in the light of the facts in this case.

I believe this bill should be laid on the table, and at the proper time I will move, if nobody else does, that the bill be reported back to the House with that recommendation.

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman takes his seat, will he allow me one question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.
Mr. COX. When this claim came here to the Committee on Claims, did they after investigation report it back favorably?
Mr. CANNON. I understand that this is a favorable report.

Mr. COX. I mean the original claim when brought here from

Mr. CANNON. The Selfridge board, which existed by Senate resolution, found substantially in favor of the claimants for the amount that this bill carries; but the Marchand board, which existed by law, not by Senate resolution, and which had plenary jurisdiction, was silent as to this claim. I do not know whether it was before that board or not; but I say it is fair to assume that it was before that board or not; but I say it is fair to assume that it was; and if the claimants did not present it just after the transactions occurred it is fair to presume it was because they knew that the claim had not merit. After a lapse of a generation it is fair to indulge that supposition.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I presented this report on behalf of the committee and would like to say a few words in explanation of this bill.

The contract for making the engine and boiler for the steamer Otsego was made at a time when the Government was very anxious to have machinery of this kind made. The Government was building a large number of war vessels; and the engineer of the Navy Department, Mr. Isherwood, went to New York and induced a number of firms to make these engines.

Mr. COX. What was the date of that contract? Mr. OTJEN. Eighteen hundred and sixty-two—about August of that year. Among others, he went to James Murphy & Co., of New York, and asked them to make two engines and boilers. Mr. Murphy said that he could not do it; that he had all the work that he could do; but finally Mr. Isherwood insisted upon that establishment making at least one engine and boiler. They asked him then for the drawings, so that they might make their figures upon which to make an estimate of the cost. He had no drawings whatever; they had not been made. Mr. Isherwood assured them that a good price for one set of these engines and boilers would be $82,000. He further told them that they would cost about double the price of an engine of a Staten Island ferryboat, which this firm had made. He insisted upon their undertaking to make one engine; and he set the price. They said to him, "We do not like to go into this thing in this way; we do not like to take these contracts without knowing what we are doing—without having the drawings; we have never taken a contract in that way. But in order to help the Government out we will take this contract; but we must have the drawings immediately."

Mr. Isherwood left; and it was six weeks before they ever got their drawings.

Mr. Isherwood came to Washington and reported to the Secretary of the Navy what had been done. In due time a contract was sent to the firm to be signed. They signed the contract, but in returning it they sent a letter to the Department in which they said they could not possibly accept that contract unless the Gov-ernment would guarantee to pay them the actual cost of construct-ing this engine and boiler over and above the contract price. They said that prices had already advanced 15 per cent on labor and material. In answer to that, Mr. Isherwood wrote them a letter telling them to push the work, and saying "the Department will allow the actual cost of labor and material used in the Otsego machinery in excess of contract price."

Under these conditions this firm went to work and built this machinery. The actual cost of this engine and boiler was $104,386.61. That amount, it should be understood, does not include a cent for extras, not a cent for rent or use of offices; it simply represents the actual cost of this work.

This claim was presented to the Selfridge board, which acted under the Senate resolution referred to by the gentleman from Illinois. That board found that the actual cost of this work was, as I have just stated, $104,386.61, which would leave $22,386.61 coming to these people.

Mr. Buckmaster appeared before that board, and in his testimony he stated:

That there are no bills for extra work, and that there are no charges in the bill annexed to this record, marked No. 36, for any condemned material, faulty workmanship, or rebracing of boilers, and that the bill shows the actual cost of labor and material.

This claim, as I understand, was never presented to the Marchand board—only to the Selfridge board; and they found that this sum of $22,386.61 was due these people.

Under the circumstances of the case, it appears to me that this is a just and honest claim and ought to be paid. There is not a dollar in it for interest; there is not a dollar in it for extras; it covers simply the actual cost of making this boiler and engine over and above the contract price. The contract was taken with due notice to the Government that the contractors could not accept it at $82,000 unless the Government would guarantee to save them harmless upon the extra expense of material and labor.

That proposition having been accepted in a letter of the engineer of the Navy Department, it seems to me that these people are entitled to this reimb reement. I have no interest in this matter except my desire to see justice done to these men.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I am the author of this bill I deem it but justice to myself and to the committee, as well as to the House, that I should say a few words upon it, and especially with respect to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. With all due respect to that gentleman, who has made so much noise about the bill in the last few moments, I will state that in my judgment the report of the committee will, upon investigation and examination, convince any man that this claim was not presented to the Marchand board, and I will venture to assert that that report is worth just as much as a guess of the gentleman from Illinois, the benefit of which he has given the committee during the discussion of this matter

This claim was presented to the Selfridge board, but was not presented to the Marchand board. The committee made a thorough examination of the matter, and came to the conclusion that it had not been presented to the Marchand board. There was nothing to show that it had been, while on the contrary the evidence was conclusive that it was not so presented.

I have no personal knowledge of the matter, but I believe the facts are conclusive, as I have stated. It was presented, however, I repeat, to the Selfridge board. That was a board composed of honorable gentlemen, constituted by a resolution of the Senate solely; but that fact alone should not affect the House at the present time any more than it did the House at the time their report ent time any more than it did the House at the time their report was first presented. There is a little feeling, necessarily, perhaps some rivalry, between the two bodies in reference to these matters; but if the Selfridge board told the truth, and if they examined carefully, as no doubt they did examine carefully, all of the facts in connection with this matter and passed upon those facts judicially and honestly, as they did, their report is of just as much value to you and to me and to members of this House as the report of any other board could possibly be, no matter how constituted.

Now, why did not this matter come before the Marchand board?

Let us examine that for a moment. The reason is not that which has already been stated by my distinguished friend from Illinois who has just taken his seat, but it was because of the fact that it could not come before it under the resolution constituting the could not come before it under the resolution constituting the board. The amount that is claimed by the surviving partner of the firm of Murphy & Co. is the contract price agreed to by the Government in the main, and in addition thereto a provision added over the hand of B. F. Isherwood, esq., engineer of the United States Navy, who acted on behalf of the Government, and signed the contract with the corporation. He himself, before this company would accept the contract for $82,000, affixed an addendum to the contract in these words:

The Department will allow actual loss in labor and material used in the Otsego machinery in excess of the contract price.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was a contract by the Government to pay to this firm the very sum that is asked here in the pending bill. It is a part of the contract. The Marchand board was orbill. It is a part of the contract. The Marchand board was organized to pass on claims entirely outside of a contract, and it was so stipulated in the resolution forming the board. But this claim is of a different character. This is a claim for an upset price of $82,000, and in addition to that the advance in the cost of labor and material. It did not belong, therefore, to the Marchand board and could not premerly come bafore them.

board, and could not properly come before them.

Now, I say it is a pretty small piece of business for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, to rise on this floor and state, without examination, that this matter was submitted to the Membersh and search with the Membersh and sea submitted to the Marchand board, when, as a matter of fact, it was not; and he simply makes a guess as to the facts of the case which he expects the House to accept as a result of his judgment based on no examination of the question. He was not here. His judgment, when he sees a thing with his own eyes, is of course as good as the judgment of anyone else; but his judgment of things that he has not seen and which he has not examined amounts only to imagination, and is worth no more than the judgment of any other man under the same circumstances; and in the present instance it is only a very bad guess. On this question I claim that his guess is not worth quite as much as mine.

I repeat, that this matter could not be considered by the Mar-chand board, because it was a contract in itself, including an amount undetermined, but which was covered by the finding of a tribunal which examined the facts at the time. The amount a tribular which examined the facts at the time. The amount was determined, I repeat, at the time the transaction took place, and not a generation afterwards. The Selfridge board, a board of gentlemen appointed by the Senate alone, whose honesty was never impugned, found the facts to be on examination that $23,600 had been expended under the terms of the contract itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this matter ought not to go off on a few guesses by the watchdog of the Treasury here. If it is honest, as it is and as I know it to be, it ought to be paid or some reason should be given for not doing so besides that given by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

The matter of this payment arose at the time the work was done, and it was presented to the only board ever constituted by Congress which had authority to examine it, and by that board, appointed by a resolution of the Senate, it was allowed and the amount de-The question of loss was determined then—the amount of the actual loss under the terms of the contract-and Mr. Buckmaster, the surviving partner of the firm of Murphy & Co., who made the contract and did the work, asks the Government now to pay him the money agreed to be paid under this contract in 1866. That is all there is of it, and it is not a matter of guess, but a matter of actual fact.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. CANNON. Well, in just one minute by the clock I will make that motion. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Joy] has certainly not read the resolution constituting the Selfridge board, the finding of that board in 1865, or the refusal of the House to abide by that finding.

Mr. JOY. In this claim?
Mr. CANNON. Yes. Neither has he read the contest between the Senate and the House, which resulted in the report of 1867, which I read to the House, constituting the Marchand board, the only which fread to the House, constituting the Marchand board, the only board that ever had legal authority to adjudicate this exact claim. They did adjudicate claims, and all claims that were referred to them. Whether this was adjudicated or not I do not know. If it was not it was the fault of the claimant, I say again, and presumably, in the minds of legislators a generation afterwards, against the claimant. Now, having had their day in court, under the law of Congress and not having held relief its court, under the law of Congress, and not having had relief, it seems to me that we will hesitate long before we proceed to appropriate this sum, thereby establishing a precedent, an entering wedge that will be followed by a troop of similar claims, aggregating much larger amounts.

I now, sir, move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will give his attention, the Chair understands that this is a Senate bill. The Chair doubts whether this motion would be in order as to a Senate bill, out of courtesy to the other body.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will make any motion that will dispose of the bill unfavorably, if I can get the committee with me. I will move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moves that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it is a second to the second that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it is a second to the second that the second th mendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cannon) there were—ayes 55, noes 25. Mr. JOY. I will ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. Joy and Mr. CANNON

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 23.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill just considered was the Senate bill. The next bill on the Calendar is the House bill, No. 3959, involving the same subject. Without objection, the House bill will be reported back with an unfavorable recommendation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought by the action of the committee the Senate bill was substituted for the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair is informed that the motion was that the Senate bill be taken up, and that a vote was had upon that question; that the committee determined to take up the Senate bill. That leaves the House bill upon the Calendar. Without objection, the recommendation will be that the House bill lie upon the table. Is there objection?

Mr. JOY. I object, Mr. Chairman. The House bill is a bill sending this question to the Court of Claims, and I should like to make a motion that that bill be laid aside with the recommenda-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that the House has expressed itself about the matter.

Mr. JOY. Let the bill go to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3950) for the relief of William P. Buckmaster.

Mr. OWENS. Is it competent to move that the bill lie upon the table, without reading?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done only by unanimous consent. The bill is a brief one.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CANNON (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the Chair for a moment, if I may interrupt the reading of the bill, to say that I have consulted the notes of the Official Reporter, which show that the Chair is in error, and that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] is right. If I may do so, I ask for the reading of the notes of the Official Reporter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been informed since by the Clerk at the desk that the wording of the resolution was as stated by the gentleman from Illinois; but that motion would have required unanimous consent. The Chair put it to a vote of the committee, and by so doing put to a vote an unparliamentary motion. The Chair thinks the easiest way is to dispose of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, if it is already done, will it not save time? There are a number of cases on this Calendar that gentlemen are desirous to get at.

Mr. LOUD. We can save money by spending it on that, can

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair cause the notes of the Official Reporter to be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the notes read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the reading of the House bill,
Mr. OTJEN said: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Senate bill (S. 90, Calendar number 470) be substituted in place of this bill. It is the same subject-matter.
The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under those circumstances, the Chair will hold that the Senate bill was substituted for the House bill. The Clerk will report the next bill upon the Calendar.

Mr. JOY. I will ask the Chair for information, What is the position of the House bill? Does it remain on the Calendar or go off the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The opinion of the Chair would be that the House bill would take the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar.
Mr. JOY. It remains on the Calendar, as I understand it.
The CHAIRMAN. Unless some disposition is made of it.
Mr. JOY. At present?

FLORA A. DARLING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 903) for the relief of Flora A. Darling.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Flora A. Darling, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,683, in full satisfaction of all claims growing out of her arrest, imprisonment, and the seizure of her property by military authority at the city of New Orleans, in January, 1894, while on a flag-of-truce boat under protection of a safe-conduct given her by Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then commanding the Department of the Gulf.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is a committee amendment. Unless it is desired that the report be read, I ask for the adoption of the amendment recommended by the committee, and that the bill as amended be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better have the report read.

The report (by Mr. Cooper of Texas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 903) for the relief of Flora A. Darling, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in a report of the Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-third Congress. A copy of said report is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "$15,683" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$5,683."

In line 6 strike out "$15,683" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$5,683."

[House Report No. 461, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4684) for the relief of Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, having considered the same, report as follows:

Heretofore, on April 15, 1884, the claim of Mrs. Flora Adams Darling, for which relief is now sought by act of Congress, was referred to the Court of Claims, and on May 31, 1887, that court made the following findings:

[Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 94. Flora Adams Darling vs. The United States.]

FINDINGS OF FACT.

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 31st day of May, A. D. 1887, the court filed the following findings of the fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives on the 15th day of April, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendant, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 25th day of May, 1887, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing John P. Jones, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and Messrs. Howard and Dewees, esqs., of counsel for the defendant, finds the following facts:

Claimant was born in the State of New Hampshire, and until her marriage, in 1859, she resided in said State. After her marriage she resided in the State of Louisiana until the commencement of the war, when she returned to the State of her nativity and resided there, as hereinafter stated.

II.

Her husband, Edward I. Darling, was a brigadier-general in the Confederate service, and claimant joined him after her return to New Hampshire in order to attend him during the illness incident to his being wounded. She was passed through the lines under the protection of a flag of truce, via Washington and Acquia Creek, to Richmond, Va. She remained at Dalton, Ga., until her husband's death, until November 29, 1863, when she applied for the protection of a flag of truce that she might return to her parents in the North, taking a letter from General Bragg to Gen. Dabney Maury, then at Mobile, Ala.

III.

General Maury made application to General Banks for the flag of truce, and the same being granted, claimant was sent from Mobile to Pascagoula to meet the flag-of-truce boat, which was to convey her to New Orleans, then within the Union lines.

Upon the arrival of the flag-of-truce boat, the Alice McQuigan, under command of Capt. Thomas Tileston, claimant was shown an official passport, signed by Gen. N. P. Banks, commanding the Department of the Gulf. authoring the safe-conduct of herself, servant, and effects on board said vessel, under the protection of a flag of truce, to New Orleans.

After a passage of about three days the vessel arrived at New Orleans, having been one stopped and examined by a Federal gunboat.

V.

When at Hickoks Landing, about 6 miles from New Orleans, Captain Tileston left the vessel, saying he would send a carriage for claimant. In about two hours a Federal sergeant arrived on board the vessel, demanded of claimant the keys to her trunk, informed her that he had orders to seize her and her bazgage, and showed an order from Gen. James A. Bowen, provostmarshal, to that effect. Claimant was taken in a private conveyance to New Orleans and put into prison, where she remained eight days, until she managed to escape, and, securing the assistance of the English consul and other influential friends, was granted a parole, after being guarded by two officers for the first few days. She was after this compelled to report daily to Gen. H. M. Porter.

After being detained in New Orleans in this way for many weeks, claimant received an order to sail for New York the next morning, on board the Baltic, an old vessel used as a Government transport. Claimant sailed in obedience to this order, being the only woman on board with the exception of her maid, in company with 400 sick soldiers. The voyage lasted fifteen days, and the vessel was detained off Cape Hatteras for several days, owing to her condition. Claimant was, in consequence of the condition of the companion way, thrown down a hatch, and suffered a severe injury to her hand, which has left it crippled ever since. She has ever since resided in the State of New York.

WII.

Before claimant left Mobile her friends advised her to place her valuables in her trunk instead of carrying them on her person.

When arrested at Hickocks Landing, the Federal officer who made the arrest demanded the keys of her trunk, and, after searching it, carried away all of her valuables. The trunk was afterwards returned to her, but she never saw any of her securities, money, or jewelry again.

Claimant placed in her trunk for safe-keeping $10,000 in Confederate cotton bonds, which had been issued the previous September, $5,000 in notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee, $23 in gold, $15 in silver, and a collection of jewelry worth $640.

VIII.

Before claimant sailed the judge-advocate of the Confederate army examined her baggage to see that there was nothing in it that could be construed as a violation of the flag of truce. Her trunk contained nothing of a political nature; no papers or documents relating to army matters; nothing but such articles as a lady would carry with her in traveling.

Claimant sympathized with her husband in political sentiment, and was disloyal to the Government of the United States.

The arrest of claimant was made because the military authorities of the United States suspected the claimant as a spy.

[SEAL.]

Assuming that the facts found by the court are true, the question presented is, Was Mrs. Darling under the protection of a safe-conduct at the time she was arrested and her property seized? The third, fourth, and fifth findings show that she was granted a safe-conduct from Mobile, Ala., to New Orleans, and was taken on board the flag-of-truce boat, the Alice McQuigan, under command of Capt. Thomas Tileston, to be carried through the lines of the contending forces to New Orleans. The vessel did not go all the way to that city, but stopped at Hickocks Landing, about 6 miles from the city, where Captain Tileston left the vessel, saying to claimant that he would send a carriage to send her to the city. About two hours afterwards, while claimant was still on board of the vessel according to the suggestion of Captain Tileston, a Federal sergeant wenton board, demanded of claimant the keys to her trunk, seized her baggage, arrested her, and confined her in prison. The seventh finding shows that the trunk was afterwards returned to her, but the securities, money, and jewelry it contained had been abstracted, and were never returned to the owner. The things of value abstracted consisted of $5,000 in notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee, $25 in gold, $15 in silver, and a collection of jewelry worth $640, aggregating $5,683.

Mrs. Darling, at the time of her arrest, as before stated, was still on the flag-of truce boat, and was remaining there under the advice of the commanding officer of the vessel, under whose protection she was, and it was her privilege and right to follow his advice until he had provided a conveyance for her into the city. It she had acted otherwise, and left the boat and attempted to go to the city, and in so doing had been captured or in jured by the military forces of the United States, it could have been claimed that it was her own fault in not observing the directions of the officer having her under his protection. She did observe

Under such circumstances, the committee are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to compensation from the Government for the property taken from her, excepting the $10,000 Confederate cotton bonds, the claim for which the committee disallow.

Wildman, in his work on the Laws of Nations, includes every species of contraband known to modern nations, and securities in the transactions of life or the possession of them is not regarded unlawful, and only mentions official communications as contraband under a flag of truce. He says:

"If one belligerent does not wish to receive the person or effects of one who holds a passport under the flag of truce, he may refuse to receive the person or his effects; but to enter upon a flag-of-truce boat and seize and confiscate the securities of a person who has been granted protection is denominated by the laws of nations an act of perfidy."

The authorities upon international law are unanimous in declaring the liability of the Government when such an offense against the law of nations is committed.

Chancellor Kent states the true rule in the following language:

"He who promises security by a passport is morally bound to defend it against any of his subjects or forces, and make good any damage the party might sustain by violation of the passport. The privilege being so far a dispensation from the legal effects of war. it is always to be taken strictly, and must be confined to the purpose and place and time for which it is granted. A safeguard generally includes the necessary baggage and servants of the person to whom it is granted." (Kent's Com., 181.)

Vattel defines the general rule in substantially the same language:

"He who promises security by a safeguard promises to afford it wherever he has command, not only in his territories, but likewise in every place where any of his troops may happen to be: and he is bound not only to forbear violating that security, either by himself or his people, but also to protect it and defend the person to whom he has promised it, to p those humane rules which enlightened nations recognize, to make ample reparation.

"The violation of the good faith pledged by passports and documents of that character draws after it the most condign punishment. If it is committed on the part of the authorities or agents of the government which grants it, its bearer will be amply indemnified for all the consequences that result from the violation and the person who commits the violation will be punished in accordance with the laws of his country." (Calvo, vol. 2, p. 87, edition of 1888.)

Phillimore has, in speaking of the rights of belligerents under flags of truce, used language which might with propriety be applied to the facts in this case:

"Every belligerent acts upon the presumption that the usages of civilized war will be observed; hence flags of truce, cartels for the exchange of prisoners, and safe-conducts are held sacred by all states; they are among the belli commercia which whoever violates deserves to be treated as a pirate."

(Vol. 3, p. 1651.)

(Vol. 3, p. 1651.)

Also:

"But inasmuch as the right of safe passage conveyed by the instrument of safe-conduct is neither hurtful to a third person nor onerous to the grantor, it should always receive a liberal construction, and the instrument, whatever the language of it may be, must be so interpreted as to avoid the consequence of a manifest injustice or absurdity. Thus, for instance, a safe-conduct granted to soldiers and sailors generally must be construed to extend to all officers of the army and the fleet. So a permission 'to depart freely' must be holden to continue till the grantee arrives in a place of safety. The privilege is, in fact, always to be so construed as not to be useless to the grantee." (Phillimore's International Law, vol. 3, p. 148.)

Your committee report the bill and recommend the adoption of the following amendment: In line 6, page 1, strike out the words "fifteen thousand six hundred and eighty-three dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five thousand six hundred and eighty-three dollars," and, when so amended, that the bill do pass.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I ask the adoption of the committee amendment, and then I will move that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word or two with regard to this bill. One thing that surprises me is the extreme generosity of the Committee on War Claims in foregoing the alleged claim of this lady for $15,000 of Confederate money! It is a piece of generosity that is seldom displayed by that committee when a case is reported to this House. Now, I can not see why the Confederate money was not as valuable as this Georgia State money.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will state to the gentleman, with his consent, that it was Louisiana' and Tennessee bank money, which was good anterior to the war during the war and as good which was good anterior to the war, during the war, and as good subsequent to the war as gold.

Mr. LOUD. But, however that may be—I understood that it was Georgia money—I do not think it would have been very valuable in the country to which she was going. The fact remains that there is nothing appearing in this case to substantiate the allegations made by this lady except the statement made by herself. She might as well have made it $5,000,000 as this five thousand and odd dollars. I do not helious the property of the statement was all the property of the statement which was not become and the statement which was not become and the statement was all the property of the statement was all the statement which was all the statement was all the stateme sand and odd dollars. I do not believe, even on her own allega-tions, that the money amounted to over $43 or $44 in value; and we ought not to assume that the Government of the United States should reimburse a party to the extent of $5,000 for valuables alleged to have been contained in a trunk. I think that is a busialleged to have been contained in a trunk. I think that is a business that we should not engage in at this time. If the gentleman himself should lose a trunk, he would have great difficulty in recovering such an amount of money from a railroad corporation or any other corporation doing business in this country.

From the fact that we have had read the opinion of these great international-law writers it is evident they claim there has been an act of perfidy on the part of our Government. Now, that may be worth $5,000. I do not know about that. It is a question of the degree of the perfidy and how much perfidy is worth. Of course, if we are to measure "perfidy" and reimburse "perfidy," this Government may lodge a claim against the alleged Democratic party for a charge of "perfidy" made by the present occu-pant of the White House, and we might perhaps proceed to recover from that party. [Laughter.]

I can not see, in all seriousness, Mr. Chairman, that this lady has any just claim. There is nothing at this time to show that she was not properly and regularly arrested by United States forces. It is now thirty-four years since this lady was arrested, and there was evidently some good ground for the arrest at that time. I do not believe in reimbursing any person to the extent of $5,000 that may have been lost and alleged to have been contained in a trunk.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this claim has been pending for some years before Congress and before other tribunals, and this is the first time that I have ever heard called in question the fact that the lady, Mrs. Darling, lost the money claimed to have been lost. The claim passed the Court of Claims, and that court, on the evidence before it, found that she had lost the amount of money mentioned in the bill. I never saw and never had presented to me a more just claim, it appears to me, than this. Here is a lady who anterior to the war was a resident of the State of New Hampshire, whose sympathies were with the Union, who did not believe in its dissolution, and who had become the wife of a Southern planter.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the court has found that this lady sympathized with her husband?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will say, and the record will bear me out, that she sympathized with her husband when her wifely duty became superior to that of her patriotism.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to state the report shows.

Claimant sympathized with her husband in political sentiment and was disloyal to the Government of the United States?

Now, if that statement be true, what has the gentleman to say? Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will say this, on information possed by myself as a member of the committee, that every act of sessed by mysen as a memoer of the committee, that every act of this woman indicates her loyalty. She is a literary woman, spring-ing from that illustrious family, the Adamses. She is the author of a book in which her letters are to be found, showing that she advised against the views of her husband and attempted to prevent him from going into the war, and that when war was probable, she was instrumental in persuading him to leave this country and go to France or England, but when it became certain that try and go to France or England, but when it became certain that there was to be war he returned to the South and entered the Southern army, and she failed to go with him, and returned to her parents in New Hampshire.

During the war he became a general. He was wounded. She undertook to go to him, and obtained a passport at this end of the line, and did go to him and ministered to him during his sickness until he died. Thereafter she ministered for a brief period of time to the other sick soldiers. Then she obtained a passport to come back, and, under a flag of truce, at the instance of General Bragg, and with the consent and order of General Banks, she was directed to go to New Orleans. Under that flag of truce she went to a to go to New Orleans. Under that flag of truce she went to a point near New Orleans and there was told to remain upon the boat until a carriage should be sent for her. While she was there on that boat, under that banner, an armed soldier came and took her keys, opened her trunk, and took therefrom these valuables. She was put under arrest and held for eight days. There was no evidence that she was disloyal, that she was a spy, or that she was in any way inimical to the Government. She remained there for some time, but at last was sent home by the Federal authorities, and she has remained at home ever since. Her claim was presented to President Lincoln as soon as possible after she returned to the North, and he referred it to a tribunal that he thought had invisibilities of it but the tribunal decided that her bloom to the North, and he referred it to a tribunal that he thought had jurisdiction of it, but the tribunal decided that they had not jurisdiction, but expressed the opinion that the case was meritorious. Since that time the claim has been presented to every branch of the Government where it could be presented. It has been before Congress, and each House has passed upon it favorably on several different occasions, but the action of the two Houses never met, so that the bill did not become a law. Afterwards the case was referred to the Court of Claims, and they found that this amount of money and property had been taken away from her.

Mr. HULICK. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. These notes of State banks in Louisiana and Tensesses amounting to $5,000 were they would be in cold?

messee, amounting to $5,000, were they worth their face in gold?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. They were worth their face in gold anterior and subsequent to the war.

Mr. HULICK. But at the time they were taken?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCIS A. BEUTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 71) for the relief of Capt. Francis A. Beuter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to correct the muster of Francis A. Beuter, that he be recognized as captain from the 4th day of September, 1863, in the Fourth United States Colored Troops, cavalry.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the said Francis A. Beuter his pay as captain of cavalry from the 4th day of September, 1863, to the date that he was mustered and paid as captain in the Fourth United States Colored Troops, April, 1864, deducting all payments on account of any other sums heretofore paid.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I introduced that bill. It was favorably reported in the Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses. It involves only about $800. It is simply a bill to pay an officer of cavalry from the time when he was commissioned up to the time when he was mustered in. There is no question as to the service, and there is no question as to the fact that he has not been paid. He is now a man over 80 years of age and is absolutely in need of this is now a man over 80 years of age and is absolutely in need of this small pittance, which, as I have said, represents simply a salary unpaid by the Government. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. LYNCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8075) for the relief of John A. Lynch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay John A. Lynch, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,466.49, in full and complete satisfaction for services rendered and expenses incurred and defrayed by him, the said John A. Lynch, to and for the United States, at Cincinnati, in the State of Ohjo, in the years 1861 and 1862.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by me. Mr. TAFT. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by me. Its object is to pay for the services of a captain who was engaged in the recruiting service in Cincinnati. He served there for eight months during the years of 1861 and 1862, and received no pay for that service. The case has been examined by the Court of Claims and has been favorably reported by that body. Unless some gentleman desires to ask a question about the bill, I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized, I will ask to have the report in this case read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from California.

The report (by Mr. Wilson of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3075) for the relief of John A. Lynch, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in Senate Report No. 1349, first session of the Fifty-first Congress. A copy of said report is hereto appended and made a part of this report.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 1349, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

[Senate Report No. 1349, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3463) for the relief of John A. Lynch, having considered the same, report as follows:

This claim was referred to the Court of Claims by resolution of the Senate for investigation and report, under the provisions of the acts of March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887. The court has reported its findings to Congress, from which it appears that there is due the claimant the sum of $2.321.49 for his services, of which he had been paid $125, leaving due him the sum of $2.321.49 for his services, of which he had been paid $125, leaving due him the sum of $2.496.49. The findings of the Court of Claims are hereto attached and made a part of this report.

Your committee referred the bill, with these findings, to the Secretary of War for his report as to the amount which would be allowed under the law and the regulations of the War Department on the findings of the Court of Claims. The report of the Secretary of War, hereto attached, shows that $30 should be deducted from the amount found by the court, leaving the amount due the claimant $2.466.49. The letter of the Secretary of War, with its inciosures, is also attached and made a part of this report.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out the words "two thousand six hundred and swerting the words "two thousand four hundred and sixty-six dollars and forty-nine cents," in lines 6,7, and 8 of the bill, and inserting the words "two thousand four hundred and sixty-six dollars and forty-nine cents."

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 31, 1890.

Sir: I return herewith House bill 9199, "for the relief of John A. Lynch," referred to this Department by your letter of the 22d instant, and invite your attention to the inclosed reports of the Paymaster-General, dated the 26th instant, and the Quartermaster-General, dated the 28th instant, on the bill. Very respectfully,

L. A. GRANT, Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM. M. STEWART,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith House bill 9199, for the relief of John A. Lynch, referred from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and to state that the pay and allowances of a captain and assistant quartermaster, payable by the Pay Department, for eight months from August I, 1861, to March 31, 1862, were as follows, viz:

1001, to march of, 1002, were as follows, viz.
Pay proper, $60 per month	$560.00
Servant's pay, $12 (and $13) per month.	20.00
Subsistence for self and servants	364.50
Forage for 3 horses, if actually owned and kept, at $8 each per month.	192.00

1,240.33

There were no additional allowances to a captain and assistant quarter-master when acting as commissary, as paragraph 1314, Army Regulations, 1881, forbade payment for two staff appointments at the same time.

The other items, fuel, quarters, office rent, and clerk hire, pertain to the Quartermaster-General's Department.

Very respectfully,

WM. SMITH, Paymaster-General, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The Secretary of War.

War Department, Quartermaster-General's Office, Washington, D. C., May 28, 1890.

Sir: I have the honor to return the letter of Hon. WILLIAM M. Stewart, United States Senate, of the 22d instant, inclosing a bill for the relief of John A. Lynch, and findings of the Court of Claims in his case, with request that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs be furnished a statement of the amount of money that would be allowed to the claimant under the findings of the court, assuming the findings to be correct, if the matter was before the War Department for settlement, and to report as follows:

Under paragraphs 963 and 974, Army Regulations of 1861, a captain and assistant quartermaster of the Army, on duty at Cincinnati, Ohi, for the eight months from August 1, 1861, to March 31, 1862, inclusive, would have been entitled to the following-mentioned allowances from the Quartermaster's Department, namely:

In the findings of the Court of Claims an allowance of $90 is made for office fuel. The Quartermaster bepartment was authorized by the Regulations to furnish fuel in kind only for the six months from October 1, 1861, to March 31, 1862, and there is no authority to pay commutation therefor; hence this item of allowance is omitted in this report.

The cost to the Quartermaster's Department for wood at Cincinnati, Ohio, at about the time referred to, was $4.75 per cord. At this rate the cost for furnishing fuel for an office in that city for six months would have been $28.50.

Very respectfully,

S. B. HOLABIRD,

Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

S. B. HOLABIRD, Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

[Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 127, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

COURT OF CLAIMS. CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 10, 1890.

Sir: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings of the Court of Claims filed April 7, 1890, in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate of the United States, under the act of March 3, 1883.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The President of the Senate.

[Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 4664. John A. Lynch v. The United States.]

At a Court of Claims held in the city of Washington on the 7th day of April, A. D. 1890, the court filed the following statement of case and findings of fact, to wit:

The claim in the above-entitled case was transmitted to the court by the Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, on the 8th day of June, 1888. Luther H. Pike, esq., appeared for claimant, and the Attorney-General, by Assistant Attorney-General John B. Cotton, his assistant, and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 2lst day of January, 1890. STATEMENT OF CASE.

At the outbreak of the rebellion, in the year A.D. 1861, the claimant, John A. Lynch, was a citizen of the United States, a resident of the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, and by profession a lawyer.

In 1861 John C. Frémont, a major-general in the Army of the United States, was assigned to the command of the Department of the West, with head-quarters at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and was clothed with extraordinary power and authority for recruiting, organizing, and equipping troops for his command in and outside the limits of his department, and for selecting and appointing and directing the selection and appointment of such officers and agents as he might deem necessary to assist him in the due execution of the powers he was so clothed with.

General Frémont appointed Richard M. Corwine an officer under him, to wit, judge-advocate, with the rank of major, and sent him to Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, with directions and authority to there recruit, organize, and equip troops for his command, and to arrange their transportation to his department.

The said R. M. Corwine, as part of his arrangements for recruiting, organizing, and equipping troops for and transporting them to General Frémont's command, induced the claimant to assist him therein, and appointed claimant nominally to the rank of captain, assistant quartermaster, with assurance that upon such appointment he would be duly commissioned the same in the Army of the United States.

III.

The claimant, relying upon this assurance and acting under that appointment from the said Corwine, gave his entire time for a period of eight months in the years A. D. 1861 and 1862 in assisting said Corwine. From the latter part of July, 1861, until on or about the 6th of September of that year he acted both as assistant quartermaster and commissary of subsistence, but from the 6th of September, 1861, to on or about the 31st day of March, A. D. 1862, he acted only as assistant quartermaster, and all the services he so rendered were arduous and valuable to the United States.

The claimant has never been paid anything for the services he so rendered, or on account of the expenses he incurred necessarily while rendering them, and paid out of his own means, such expenses being for rooms, light, and fuel, and attendance thereon, and for clerical assistance, except a sum of $125, and for transportation.

The claimant was on the 28th of November, A. D. 1862, commissioned regularly a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, but was not given rank to cover the service he had rendered antecedently. As such regularly commissioned officer he served faithfully and efficiently until he was discharged honorably after the suppression of the rebellion, and his accounts, found correct, have been closed in the Treasury Department.

The claimant, by reason of being in active service in the field, was ignorant of and therefore unable to avail himself of the benefit intended for others and himself who had assisted General Frémont by the act of Congress approved March 25, 1862, and by the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. He was ignorant of the existence of the commission at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, which, in pursuance of said acts of Congress, was created under and by General Orders of the War Department, No. 64 of 1863, as also of the rules promulgated by the General Orders of the War Department, No. 120, of March 24, 1864, for the payment of claims for such services presented to said commission, and, being so ignorant, he presented no claim to said commission.

VI.

By law and the Army Regulations of 1861, paragraphs 963 and 974, and the Revised Army Regulations of the same year, paragraphs 1068 and 1081, in force from the 31st of July, A. D. 1861, to the 1st day of April, A. D. 1862, had claimant been a regularly commissioned captain, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, and so stationed and rendering said services at Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, during said period of time, his army allowances and commutations would have been, as certified to the court by the War Department—each item aggregated—as follows: For pay proper (eight months), $560; servant's pay, $103.83; servant's clothing, $20; subsistence, $364.50; forage for three horses, if in actual service, $182; quarters, $192; quarters fuel, $119.18; office, $240; office fuel, $90, and by authority for payment for clerk hire contained in the general appropriation acts for the support of the Army he would have had for one clerk, at $100 per month, $90, making a total of $2.621.49. But the claimant by his petition in this court has sought to recover only $1,262.96 for the same services.

VII.

The claimant during the eight months he so rendered the services unpaid for did not actually own and keep in service three horses, but in lieu thereof hired horses and vehicles for his transportation which was made actually necessary by the distances apart of the different bodies of troops he had to give attention to and he had constantly to traverse; but the amount of such expenditures has not been shown to the satisfaction of the court.

VIII.

The claimant received $125 on account of clerk hire during said period of eight months' service, through said R. M. Corwine.

IX.

The claimant was loyal to the Government and cause of the United States throughout the war of the rebellion. BY THE COURT.

A true copy. Test, this l0th day of April, A. D. 1890. [SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this claim is based on services rendered by the claimant at the beginning of the war. General Fremont was in command of the Department of the West, with authority to appoint officers and agents to assist him in West, with authority to appoint officers and agents to assist him in his duties and in organizing that army. Under that authority he appointed Mr. Corwine, then an officer in the United States Army, and sent him to Cincinnati with authority to employ assistants in the work of recruiting and organizing that department. Mr. Corwine employed this layman, who was then an eminent lawyer (a partner of Mr. Hayes, afterwards President of the United States), to assist him, and for eight months he gave his time and attention to the work of recruiting and organization. That was a time when the Army was not well equipped, and when it was not quite clearly understood how men serving their country as soldiers were to receive their pay. On the faith of the promise it was not quite clearly understood how men serving their country as soldiers were to receive their pay. On the faith of the promise that he would be made a captain to cover all this time, he gave those eight months of service, and never received for that service one dollar of compensation. I submit to you, gentlemen, that this man, who had patriotism enough to give his time and services to his country in this way, should not be deprived of such pay as the services are worth as established on presentation of the case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and who seems to be familiar with this case, why this bill prepases to give this claimant some $2.400 when he only taken his seat, and who seems to be familiar with this case, why this bill proposes to give this claimant some $2,400 when he only claims, according to the report, $1,262.96?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. That is a very pertinent question, and one which of course came before the committee. The reason is this: This man presented his claim according to his understanding of what a captain was allowed. The Court of Claims investigated the matter and found that the claimant had not claimed all that he was entitled to. They therefore found in his favor for a sum larger than he claimed; that is, they found he was entitled to more than he had asked. I submit that if a person, ignorant of his legal rights, presents a claim for less than is due him, it is no reason rights, presents a claim for less than is due him, it is no reason why the Government should refuse to pay the full amount that is due. That is the reason the report is drawn as it is.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that if a man gets from the Government what he claims, he is doing pretty well. I believe the claimant is the best judge, at least from his standpoint, of what is due him. Now, if you will dissect this report you will find that this man would have been entitled, among other items, to $100 per month for clerk hire. Probably he did not have a clerk; yet this House, in its beneficence, proposes to pay him for clerk hire during all that time. He would have been allowed a certain amount for fuel. He did not have that fuel; yet this House, in its generosity, says, "You must have the money for the fuel anyway."

It is a question which arises at this distance of time whether this man has any just claim whatever. Still, in view of the find-this man has any just claim whatever. Still, in view of the finding of the court, I will assume that there is justly due to him what he claims; and I will move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 6, the words "two thousand four hundred and sixty-six dollars" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,262.96."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 34, noes 41.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to interrogate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Wilson] who reported this bill. Am I correct in assuming that the proposed appropriation to the claimant carries certain allowances which the army regulations give to ant carries certain allowances which the army regulations give to regularly commissioned officers?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS. If I understand correctly, a regularly commissioned captain in the service would be entitled to a servant's pay at the rate of $12 per month. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether this claimant actually had a servant during the time for which he claims compensation.

Mr. LOUD. It seems he has got to take pay for it anyway.
Mr. POWERS. Did he have such servant in fact?
Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I can not answer as to that.
Mr. POWERS. I see also that the regulations allow for servant's clothing at the rate of $2.50 per month. Now, if this man had no servant, he should have no clothing account for his servant sheld he? ant, should he?

Mr. LOUD. But he has got to have the money all the same.
Mr. WILSON of Ohio. I am not undertaking to answer these uestions. I am abiding by the decision of the Court of Claims.
Mr. POWERS. I see that a captain in the service is entitled to questions. forage for three horses, if actually owned and kept, at $8 a month each. Did this man have three horses?

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The finding is that he had not the horses, but that he hired horses to go to different places—to different organizations of the Army—costing more probably than he would have been entitled to under the regulation. That finding would have been entitled to under the regulation. That finding appears in the report.

Mr. POWERS. Well, the substance of this report, as I have hastily glanced over it, is that this man expected to be made a captain in the service; was disappointed in his expectations for about eight months; and now he claims that his pay as captain should antedate his service as such for this period of eight months prior to the time he was commissioned. Is that about the substance of the

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. The claim is that he was appointed under authority which was supposed to make him substantially a captain and which was to be confirmed by the issue of a commis-captain and which was to be confirmed by the issue of a commission to him, but the commission was deferred for eight months.

Mr. POWERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I want to oppose this bill, but it seems to me a rather dangerous principle to pay a man for the time that he rested on his oars in expectation of an office. A great many gentlemen on this floor, no doubt, if they could recover for the time that they spent in desiring to be members of Congress, would be pretty well paid. [Laughter.] This claimant was employed by General Fremont or some agent of his to assist in the recruiting of troops. He expected, under the golden hues of the promises held out to him, that he would go into the service with the rank of captain, and ultimately he did go in with that rank. But for eight months he was disappointed in his expectations and did not acquire the rank. Now, it is proposed by the pending bill to give him pay as of the rank of captain during the eight months preceding the receipt of his actual commission. He has already received fair pay as a layman for his services and now he desires pay at the rate of a captain in the regular service, including pay for servants, when he had no servants, and also emincluding pay for servants, when he had no servants, and also embracing forage for horses, when he had no horses, and for the allowances generally provided to officers of that rank under the army regulations.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that under the conditions in which we find the Treasury of the United States at this time it is a proper occasion to consider, somewhat carefully, before we undertake to pay claims which have no legal force and which seem to me have very doubtful equitable right to compensation, the situation confronting us

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

question?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. I understand that this bill is based on a record of findings of the Court of Claims. Does the court report, as a matter of law, that this man is entitled to the compensation accorded him in the bill?

Mr. POWERS. I do not understand that it is so reported.

Mr. LOUD. They only claim that he would have been entitled to it—that he had an equitable claim, in other words.

Mr. POWERS. The Court of Claims do not report any legal proposition about it. They do say that the amount of the claim for horses, servants, etc., has been shown to the satisfaction of the court. That is all.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, if this is an honest claim, let us pay it. If it is not an honest claim, let us reject it. If we owe this man anything we owe him the two thousand and some odd dollars which the bill carries. The Court of Claims, I understand—

Mr. DINGLEY. He does not claim but $1,200.

Mr. WILLIS. No matter what he claims. If we find that a man does not claim enough, it is our duty as honest men to give him enough to satisfy our obligation, according to the standard of righteousness and truth. Some men do not claim enough; others claim too much. If a man came to this body and claimed too much, and we found that the claim was exaggerated, although meritorious, we would cut him down to a proper adjustment; and I claim that on the principle of justice and right if a man has not claimed enough it is our duty to pay him what we owe

Mr. Chairman, there is a way to do wrong and a way to do right. I do not know whether this man's claim is just or not; but if it is just, I want to vote for the bill. If it is unjust, I want to vote against it.

But I will say this, not simply as a matter of theory, but as the result of experience, that men who were ready to volunteer, to incur the dangers of battle and the hardship of campaigning in those perilous times, in the days when this man came to the front, were comparatively rare. They were the men the country wanted those perilous times, in the days when this man came to the front, were comparatively rare. They were the men the country wanted at the time, men that the country needed and must have, men who were ready to make sacrifices for the good of the country. These were the men who were ready to put themselves in the breach for the country in order that it might not die; men who were ready to die that the country might live. And if this man started out with the expectation of getting the rank of captain, as he had a right to expect, and did his duty faithfully along the line, according as this report seems to indicate, and we owe him anything at all we owe him the entire debt which is due to him as a captain, and this debt, in honesty and honor, we are bound to pay. If he chose to hire his horses instead of keeping them, and employed his servants, and the amount raises the total to something over $2,000, although he does not claim and did not claim that much, we owe it all to him and ought to pay it.

Now, there is in this country a system and spirit of turning down and disputing just claims against the Government that is beneath the dignity of such a body as this. We ought to spurn with indignation every unjust claim that is brought before us, but at the same time be broad minded enough to support and vote for the payment of every just claim in the hands of our citizens against this Government. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I thought the proposition made by myself was exceedingly generous. I think if this House will pay what is claimed in this case it will do all that it ought to do. I can not understand why this House should now seek to force upon this man the pay for his servant, his clothing, and his rations, when it is quite apparent that he never had any servant and could not have paid him any wages, and hence he could not have had to pay for any clothing for him. You are endeavoring here also not have paid him any wages, and hence he could not have had to pay for any clothing for him. You are endeavoring here also to force upon him pay for the subsistence of horses which he never

Now, it is a question, Mr. Chairman, whether this man was in the service or not. It is apparent that if he was regularly in the service he would not come to Congress at this hour to be reimbursed. We, thirty-two or thirty-four years from that time, are unable to ascertain the facts surrounding this case. It is more than probable that certain verbal promises might have been made to this gentleman that, under certain conditions, if he would perform certain acts and do certain things, they would use their inform certain acts and do certain things, they would use their influence some time in the future to secure a captain's commission for him, which he eventually secured. But I am willing to overlook even all of that. I am willing to give this gentleman the pay and rank of a captain, but I am not willing to do more than that, and, if it be in my power, I will endeavor to convince gentlement that they should have accepted the amendment I proposed because when this House by its act, reimburges a man in the here; because when this House, by its act, reimburses a man in the amount that he claims, I think it has gone sufficiently far. There is no right whatever, there is no equity whatever, in this claim, above twelve hundred and some odd dollars. Now, I hope this House will defeat the whole claim.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what would become of the country if it were not for the gentleman from California. He seems to think it incumbent upon him to protect the United States to the exclusion of everybody. Now, I agree with him in this, that no unjust claim should be paid, and I do not want one dollar paid to the claimant here, or anybody else, that is not any capitable laking explaints the Government. It is not that is not an equitable claim against the Government. It is not a legal claim, or it would not be here. I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. Loud] on that. But this report of the Court of Claims is explicit as to the power to employ agents to perform the services which he performed. Listen, if you please, to the finding of the court with reference to that power:

In 1861 John C. Fremont, a major-general in the Army of the United States, was assigned to the command of the Department of the West, with head-quarters at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, and was clothed with extraordinary power and authority for recruiting, organizing, and equipping troops for his command in and outside the limits of his department, and for selecting and appointing, and directing the selection and appointment of such officers and agents as he might deem necessary to assist him in the due execution of the powers he was so clothed with.

He was so clothed with it.

Now, the finding goes on to state that, in pursuance of this authority, the claimant in that case was employed to render the services of a captain, and that he did render such services for services of a captain, and that he did render such services for eight months, to the exclusion of all other business. I submit to you that he must have had quarters, he must have had fuel, he must have had horses or their equivalent by employment, because he could not have performed these duties without having these things. Even if they were found at his own fireside, if he was then giving his time to his country, I submit to you, gentlemen, that equity demands that he be compensated for his services as fully as if he had been commissioned and mustered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken on a division (demanded by Mr.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LOUD) there were—ayes 55, noes 20.

Mr. LOUD. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting the committee). One hundred and thirty-four members are present—a quorum.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES STEWART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 897) for the relief of James Stewart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the claim of James Stewart, who served as first sergeant, second and first lieutenant in the Fourth Artillery and captain in the Eighteenth Infantry of the United States Army in the late war of the rebellion, for a balance of wages earned by him in the suppression of said rebellion and during his entire time of service in said Army, and not paid to him, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for due investigation; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to render a judgment, irrespective of the lapse of time, for the amount, if any, found due of the United States upon said claim.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the words:

"That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed, on application being made by Maj. James Stewart, retired officer of the United States Army, or his legal representatives, to reopen, adjust, and pay his account for longevity service in the United States Army, in accordance with the law applicable thereto as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding."

otherwise appropriated, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to the bill for the purpose of having the claim go direct to the officials of the Treasury Department, there being no question of fact which the Court of Claims could be called to pass upon.

The case is this: Major Stewart served for a number of years in the Army of the United States. Under the United States law he was entitled to certain additional compensation for each five years of service. Major Stewart was too busily engaged a large part of the time in fighting the battles of his country in the civil war to learn of this fact, and until quite recently did not learn of the additional compensation to which he was entitled. When he did so he was met by bar of the statute of limitations.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this House during the first session of the present Congress, on the 20th day of February, passed a bill for the relief of Lieut. W. A. Jones in language exactly identical with the amendment which I offer to this bill. It is the same kind of a case. A case arising under a claim for longevity pay, which could not go to the accounting officers of the Treasury for the reason that the statute of limitations barred it, and could not or ought not to go to the Court of Claims because all the evidence necessary to determine the amount due is in the possession of the Treasury officials. I would like to have the proceedings of this House in the case rethe amount due is in the possession of the Treasury officials. I would like to have the proceedings of this House in the case referred to read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

LIEUT. COL. W. A. JONES.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1821) to reopen and adjust the account for service of Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers.

The bill was read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they hereby are, directed, on application being made by Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, or his legal representatives, to reopen, adjust, and pay his claim for longevity service in the United States Army, in accordance with the law applicable thereto as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the report may be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. DENNY) was read, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1821) to reopen, adjust, and pay the account for service of Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers, having duly considered the same, do hereby report said bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

"This is a claim for longevity pay for service in the Army. It appears that the Treasury officials for quite a time construed the act of Congress providing that an officer of the Army should have an increase of pay for each five years of service in the Army in such manner as to apply only to service of commissioned officers; but after many years the Court of Claims held that it applied to the service of enlisted men and of cadets at West Point, and this decision was confirmed by the Supreme Court. It was thus fully settled that this class of officers, as a result of the aforesaid ruling of Treasury officials, had not been paid for their services the full amount intended by the longevity law. At this point the Second Comptroller of the Treasury took the stand that the accounts for service of these officers had been settled and closed, and that he could not reopen them without authority of Congress. For this reason those officers, who have thus been deprived of pay justly due them, have been forced to go before Congress for redress, as granted in the bill in this case, if passed."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? There was no objection.

An amendment proposed by the Committee on Claims, to strike out the word "claim," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the word "account," was agreed to.

word "claim," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the word "account," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed on the table.
On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have had this record read for the purpose of appealing to this House to do the same justice to Major Stewart that was done to the recipient of the benefit of the act which has just been referred to. Major Stewart was one of the heroes of the late war. He was a man who had enlisted as a young man in the Regular Army, and when the war of the rebellion came on had attained to the rank of sergeant in one of the batteries. For gallantry and devotion to the service he was promoted successively through the grades up to that of major. Had I the time to give to the House a description of some of the magnificent daring and courage which he displayed, it would satisfy the members that no more honorable record was ever made by private, by colonel, or by general in the war of the rebellion than was made by him.

At a reunion of the Loyal Legion in the city of Cincinnati a few years ago, after General Fairchild, then at the head of that order, had described one of the magnificent assaults which had been successfully carried out by Stewart's battery, complimenting him successfully carried out by Stewart's battery, complimenting him highly upon his bravery and courage, the modest old major simply rose and said, "I thank you, General." General Fairchild responded, "No; do not thank me; thank the God above who gave us such men in our time of need."

He belonged to the Iron Brigade. At Antietam, at Gettysburg, and all the other battles in which this brigade took part, Stewart's and all the other battles in which this brigade took part, Stewart's battery was ever in the thickest of the fight. He served for many years ignorant of the additional compensation to which he was entitled. He made no claim for it within the time which the law allowed. This bill is to give him an opportunity to get from the Government the pay that he might justly have claimed. He is now an old man. He has no son upon whom he can depend in the declining years of his life. He gets a small compensation. He wants this money, in case it is given, to get a home in which the declining years of his life may pass. He has earned it by his courage; he is entitled to it for his services; and only that bar of the statute of limitations, which has been set aside and broken down in other cases, stands between him and his right to recover this money.

Now, a similar act was passed by this House at the last session. I introduced a claim for longevity pay for the widow of the Hon. Thomas L. Young, who was formerly a member of this House, who had failed, just as Major Stewart failed, to claim his longevity pay. He was entitled to it as much as others who have drawn theirs; and while the bill was worded in perhaps a little different way, because made payable direct to the widow instead of to him, yet it was understood by the House and was stated when the bill was passed that it was a longevity-pay claim.

Now, objection may be urged that it was a longevity-pay claim.

Now, objection may be urged that this is opening the way to thousands of other claims. That is the objection we hear whenever war claims come up in this House. I do not care how just a claim may be, the objection is, "Do not pass this bill, because if you do there will be a flood of other bills just like it to go through." If that is the theory upon which this House is to proceed, we ought to shut our doors and go home, because there is no bill introduced in this House that may not be followed by a flood of similar legislation. The ground upon which we ought to stand is that this Government is honest enough, is fair enough, and just enough to pay its proper debts and dues. This is a claim which might have pay its proper debts and dues. This is a claim which might have been paid by the Government under the law, but which, through the ignorance of Major Stewart concerning his rights under the law, was not paid. It seems to me it is but a just and proper tribute to the worth and the distinguished service of this gallant soldier that he should in the last years of his life receive from the Government that which it owes him. We pay out thousands of dollars for pensions. This is as just a claim as any pension claim. Major Stewart is old. He has but few years longer to live, has no one upon whom he can depend, and this will render peaceful and happy the final years of his active and honorable life in the service of his country.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if I understand this bill; and if I do I want the Committee of the Whole to understand it; and then I am quite content the committee should do stand it; and then I am quite content the committee should do as the committee no doubt will do, its duty in the premises. I understand that Major Stewart is now on the retired list.

Mr. BROMWELL. He is.

Mr. CANNON. What is his pay?

Mr. BROMWELL. I am informed that he gets about $1,700.

Mr. CANNON. How long has he been on the retired list?

Mr. BROMWELL. I forget; some six or seven years, I believe.

Mr. CANNON. How old a man is he now?

Mr. CANNON. How old a man is he now?

Mr. BROMWELL. I can not answer the gentleman's question categorically, but I should say that he is in the neighborhood of Categorically, but I should say that he is a large of age.

70 years of age.

Mr. CANNON. He was a private soldier in 1851, it appears.

Mr. BROMWELL. The honorable gentleman from New York

[Mr. Wadsworth] knew him as a child, and he can tell you his age better than I can.

Mr. CANNON. Why, Wadsworth himself is not over 71.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. My friend from Ohio means that Major Stewart knew me as a child. [Laughter.] Mr. CANNON. I hold in my hand a report and I want to call attention to it and to state what it is and why and how it comes here. In 1838 a law was passed providing that Every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States.

That act was passed July 5, 1838. From 1838 down to, say, 1890 that law received a uniform construction to the effect that the only persons that were entitled to this increase in the way of longevity pay were commissioned officers in the Army, and it was for service as commissioned officers that they were allowed the one for service as commissioned officers that they were allowed the one additional ration per diem for every five years of service. From 1838 down to about 1890, I suppose, that was the uniform construction of the law. But in and around the city of Washington there are a great many very bright people, some of them lawyers—and I like lawyers, though if I were a better one myself I would probably like them better. [Laughter.] Among these bright people, I say, are lawyers and retired officers of the Army, some with a great deal of leisure, and some with not so much, and it got into somebody's head that there was a chance to recover something in the Court of Claims by securing a different construction of the the Court of Claims by securing a different construction of the law, namely, that if a man who was a commissioned officer had previously served as a private soldier, the time of his service as a private should be counted, so that for every five years of service, including his service as a private, he should have longevity pay, and that construction would apply to a large number of cases.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. May I correct the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. There was an act passed in 1878 expressly including the time served as an enlisted man.

Mr. CANNON. I do not find that set out in the report of the committee.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will read it; it is very brief:

SEC. 7. That on and after the passage of this act all officers of the Army of the United States who have served as officers in the volunteer forces during the war of the rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, shall be and are hereby credited with the full time they have served as such officers and as such enlisted men in computing their service for longevity pay and retirement.

Mr. CANNON. That act was passed when? Mr. WILSON of Ohio. It was approved June 18, 1878. Mr. CANNON. And this claim is based upon that act—is that correct

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. So much of it as includes the time that this officer served as an enlisted man.

Mr. CANNON. How much of it depends on that, and what is the other part based on?

the other part based on?

Mr. BROMWELL. The object of this bill is to refer this case to the Treasury officials and let them find out.

Mr. CANNON. What is the other basis for this claim? I am asking for information. I am as swiftfooted as any man here to do real justice to this man, if it can be done safely.

Mr. STEELE. About 1868 an act was passed providing that all officers should have longevity pay and 10 per cent for every five years' service in the Volunteer or in the Regular Army. This act, amendatory thereof provides that in computing longevity pay years' service in the Volunteer or in the Regular Army. This act, amendatory thereof, provides that in computing longevity pay there shall be included the term of service as a private soldier. Longevity pay may be added to the pay of an officer—for every five years of service 10 per cent—up to 40 per cent, but longevity pay of certain officers is limited. For instance, a colonel may not have the full 40 per cent added to his pay, or a brigadier-general or a major-general may not have the 40 per cent added to his pay. This act was intended only to include a few men who served for a time as private soldiers and afterwards became officers. If this officer, for instance, had served as an officer for fifteen years he might count that fifteen years and then five years of service as a private soldier, making up the twenty years. If this man served long as an officer, I can not see that the passage of this bill is going to give him money enough to buy a home, as has been suggested here. It would give him 10 per cent for the first five years' service and 10 per cent for the next five years, and so on up to 40 per

Mr. CANNON. Now, I think I understand the matter. I am seeking information in good faith, so as to find out just how I should vote. That this man Major Stewart served as a private soldier from 1851 until 1861; that then when the war broke out he was commissioned as a second lieutenant, and from that time until commissioned as a second fleutenant, and from that time until the present has been in the Regular Army, receiving promotion from time to time; that he was retired a few years ago; and that his pay as a retired officer of the Army is $1,700 a year.

Now, under the construction of the laws on this subject as given by the accounting officers of the Treasury, this officer of the Regular Army claims that he has been cut out of over $4,000 that ought to have been paid him before or immediately after the act of 1878 was passed; and now, because somebody along in 1890 sped in the Court of Claims in a case of this kind and recovered sued in the Court of Claims in a case of this kind and recovered, he seeks to recover the sum named in the bill. But when he goes to the Court of Claims they say, "Yes, but you are barred by the statute of limitations." Then he comes to Congress and says, "Being barred by the statute of limitations, I have no remedy under the existing law, and I ask legislation that will give me

It may be that it is the temper of the House to-day to grant this claim. I wish to say that no man has a greater admiration for officers or privates of the Regular Army than I have. They are our fellow-citizens. They represent the arm of force of the Government. They are worthy men, entitled to credit and honor. They are entitled to a certainty of tenure; and they have it. They are entitled to certain pay; they have it. They are entitled to go mpon the retired list; they have that privilege. This worthy officer has had all that; and he has it to-day. But I want to submit to the Committee of the Whole in reference to this retired list of the Army, filling up as it is with people who are in far better condition than equally worthy men who were in the Volunteer Army, there may be danger—I have sometimes thought there was danger—that you will build up a great pay roll that by and by will break of its own weight.

Having said that work let Having said that much, let me state now the case of a commissioned officer, a second lieutenant in the volunteer force of the Army—one who went through the war, perhaps, side by side with this man. This officer of the Volunteer Army went out of the service at the close of the war. Having received his pay as an officer while the war continued, he has not been on pay since. If he was disabled (as it does not appear that this worthy officer he was disabled (as it does not appear that this worthy officer was, according to the report) he gets a pension the amount of which is away below—which is only one-quarter part of the amount which this worthy officer receives upon the retired list. And you must recollect that for one officer of the Regular Army situated as this one is there are a hundred of the Volunteer Army who are not enjoying his advantages. Now, I would not take away from this man the $1,700 a year which he now worthly receives. I would not measure his deserts strictly or unjustly—

Mr. STEELE. Just one minute, if the gentleman pleases. I can see where the statement which I just made was probably misleading. Under the act to which I have referred this man, if he had counted his ten years of service from 1851 to 1861, would have commenced drawing 20 per cent from the date of the passage of commenced drawing 20 per cent from the date of the passage of the act, instead of waiting for the expiration of five years' service. the act, instead of waiting for the expiration of five years service. He would have commenced getting the 20 per cent addition to his pay that much sooner. So that the amount might be, I suppose, more than $4.000. His pay now is undoubtedly $218.75 per month.

Mr. CANNON. That is his pay now on the retired list?

Mr. STEELE. Yes. sir; his pay on the retired list.

Mr. CANNON. Then he gets $2,600 a year or more, instead of $1,700. My friend from Ohio [Mr. Bromwell] was in error.

Mr. BROMWELL. I made my statement on the best information I had tion I had. Mr. CANNON. Then this man is now getting, and has received for six years past, without one particle of service to the Government, and will receive until he dies—and I am glad of it, because it is our policy touching the Regular Army-$2,600 and more a Year.

Now, then, it is said in Holy Writ, "To him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken that which he hath." I can conceive how hundreds of men who served in the Volunteer Army, and did good service there, might perhaps com-plain of that rule which was laid down a long time ago, and might claim that if this amount of $4,000 is to be given to this man by removing this statutory bar, something ought to be done for them more liberal than has been done; at least their pensions should one word more and I conclude. It is asked, "Would not this man have been entitled to this amount if the decision of the court had been rendered in 1878 instead of 1890?" I answer, yes. But the decision as made in 1890 was to a man who was vigilant.

This man received every cent that he believed that he was en-titled to; yet under this decision he wants the $4,000 which he never dreamed of getting, and can not get under the laws of his country, because the statute of limitations has run. And that law is of just as great force and of as high order as is a law which would give it to him.

If you want to adopt a precedent of this kind by removing the bar of the statute of limitations, the manly method of proceeding would be to remove that bar as to all cases. And then somebody will naturally ask, How much is it going to cost? In the Almighty's chancery, considering the condition of the Treasury, considering the worthy record of this man and of 2,000,000 other men who served in the late war, I doubt if such action ought to be taken. I am slow to favor the removal of the bar of the statute of limitations in any case. The safer way is to let it be a statute of

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bromwell].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. avec 21, noes 37.

Cannon) there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have no special interest in the pending claim, but I reported it, and I want to call the attention of the committee to what I regard as the unfair statement of the gentleman from Illinois in his remarks upon this question.

This is not by any means new legislation with reference to the longevity pay of soldiers. For many years the statutes provided only that a man who had served as an officer for five years should only that a man who had served as an omeer for five years should have 10 per cent of his pay additional after that period, and for every five years of service thereafter he should have an additional 10 per cent. But in 1878 Congress passed the act which provided that if a private soldier had served in the Army five years and then became an officer of volunteers he should have longevity pay, and if he should serve another term of five years, and five years more, and still another period of five years, or four terms of five years in all, he might receive 10 per cent of his pay measured by the extent of the compensation received during each term of five

Now, I submit that the Government of the United States owes this man for three periods of service as honestly as the Govern-ment owes any man his salary for services in this House, save and except that the statute of limitations bars him from now presenting his claim because he did not do it at the proper time. We all despise the man who, in his individual capacity, pleads the statute of limitations in bar of an honest debt. Why, then, should a great Government like this refuse to open the door and allow the officials of the Treasury to pay this man what the law granted to himof the Treasury to pay this man what the law granted to him—not a law which we enacted, but a law which was enacted by those who preceded us? Those who enacted that law, at the time and under the circumstances which prevailed then, understood what it was to induce a man to serve his country in a military capacity; and the Government of the United States has kept faith with every soldier under that law. The gentleman from Illinois can not point to-day to a statute which guarantees to a private soldier anything which the country has refused to give to him. If such an occasion shall ever arise, we may well be ashamed of our Government, because it is too big and too grand and too powerful to repudiate the smallest debt of the poorest private soldier in the Army.

Give this man, then, what the law allows him, and do not stand on the fact that he was too late in presenting his claim to have the benefit of that law which other more diligent officials secured. I think this man in his old age should now receive what the Gov-ernment has provided for those who served in the Army as he has ernment has provided for those who served in the Army as he has served. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can make my voice heard in the Hall on account of the condition of my throat to-day. But I want to reply to one argument which has been made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], who finds himself in the ungracious attitude of opposing this claim merely on the technical ground that the statute of limitations at this time bars its allowance by the Treasury Department, He puts the objection, if I understand the force of his argument, on the ground that the claimant himself had been negliment, on the ground that the claimant himself had been negligent; that he had been guilty of what the law calls "laches" in the presentation of his claim—

Mr. CANNON. I said—

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). I will do justice to you in what you said

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman from Ohio does not want to misrepresent me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not.
Mr. CANNON. I said that, so far as I had knowledge, my belief on the subject was that the claimant did not know or suppose, nor did anyone else know or suppose, but what he was getting every dollar to which he was entitled under the law until the decision of the court to which I have referred, which was made almost a generation after the service had been performed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I should put it on a better ground than that

Mr. CANNON. Well, my friend from Ohio always does things much better than I can possibly do. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Only occasionally, when I am on the side of justice and right, and you, by accident, happen to get on the other side.

The gentleman from Illinois did say that the person who brought his suit in the Court of Claims in time was diligent, and therefore by a fair and just inference we must understand that he assumes the man who did not bring his suit within the time prescribed by the law had not been diligent and deserved to suffer.

Now, there is a pretty well settled principal of law by which, if A does any act or fails to do any act by which B is misled in the prosecution of his claim, A shall not be heard afterwards to set up his own act or his own failure to act in bar or in defeat of the right of B. Now, this principle applies here. Here stood the law upon the statute books of the United States that gave to this man so much additional pay. It was his legal right then, and it is his moral right now.

I quite agree with what my friend from Ohio [Mr. Wilson] has said in better words than I can say, that it is a pitiful sight to see a great government pleading the bar of the statute of limitations against a claim admittedly just and honest, and when it is done by anybody short of a sovereignty the person doing it loses his credit among all honorable men.

Now, let us see what the failure to act on the part of the Gov ernment has been in this behalf. The Government so construed its own statute as to forbid the prosecution of this claim by this applicant. It said to the men of the Army, "You are not entitled to charge up on this account of service the time which you spent as enlisted men," and it did not pay it. Now, shall it be said that because this claimant stood by and believed this Government was acting honestly and intelligently at the time, and therefore did not prosecute his claim in the Court of Claims, that he shall be barred? It is a much better construction to put upon all this conduct that the Government understood the law as they construed it, and refused the payments which they did under it, and then, having ascertained by a judicial settlement of the question that the Government was wrong, that that suit was brought by one individual, it is true, for his own benefit, I grant, but that, in the absence of a multitude of suits, he shall be construed to have brought the suit for himself and for all others situated as he

Now, I do not add anything to what has been so well said by my colleague from the Second district of Ohio [Mr. Bromwell] about the equity there is in taking this claim and acting upon it directly, thereby giving to this old soldier the money that he had a right to years ago. I put it upon the ground that the Government itself, by its own conduct, prevented this action from being brought, held this man's money, refused to pay it to him, and now invokes the running of the statute in order that it may have the benefit of its own act, when, in fact, its own act misled this citizen into a failure to prosecute his legitimate claim. That is all I desire to

Mr. HULICK. Before the gentleman takes his seat I hope he will make one explanation. At the time the court gave its decision on the validity of this law, in the case referred to by the gentleman, was this claim then barred by the statute?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I so understand that it was then barred. Mr. HULICK. Then it is a most favorable interpretation to be given

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the same rule, in a less forcible de-

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the same rule, in a less forcible degree, would apply in any event.

Mr. HULICK. Why, certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because it may be said that he is charged with a knowledge of the pending litigation, and he may have had that knowledge. He may be chargeable with it, but he had the right, in all conscience, holding an honest claim, to suppose that he was dealing with an honest Government. I am putting a violation of the pending that the said that he is charged with a knowledge. lent assumption now, and I do not insist upon it [laughter], for if and assumption now, and I do not insist upon it [laughter], for if all the men of this nation who do business did it upon the same dishonest and dishonorable principles that the United States Government does, there would not be income enough from the revenues of the country to build penitentiaries enough to send them to. [Laughter and applause.] It is a better proposition to say that he had a right to stand by and say, "My Government, when it finds that it has dealt unjustly and refused to pay me an honest claim, will adjust my claim upon the basis that the law has been construed to entitle me to."

construed to entitle me to."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. STEELE. May I just read the section of the statute that I referred to a minute ago? Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. On page 220 of the Revised Statutes, passed July 15, 1870, I find the following:

July 15, 1870, I find the following:

SEC. 1262. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service.

SEC. 1263. The total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed 40 per cent on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law.

SEC. 1267. In no case shall the pay of a colonel exceed $4,500 a year, or the pay of a lieutenant-colonel exceed $4,000 a year.

SEC. 1275. Officers wholly retired from the service shall be entitled to receive, upon their retirement, one year's pay and allowances of the highest rank held by them, whether by staff or regimental commission, at the time of their retirement.

That is, the first of the longevity pay was in 1870.

Mr. CANNON. When?
Mr. STEELE. In July, 1870. Now, if this subsequent act had been passed in 1870, giving private soldiers the advantage enjoyed by officers, that officer at that time, allowing that he was commissioned in 1861, would have been entitled, in one year from the passage of this act, to the full 40 per cent; whereas, under the reading of this statute, if he had only served five years, he would have had to serve eleven years before he would get the full 40 per cent. But, as I stated in the first place, it is to give him the additional compensation as a private soldier, or it might be said to be retroactive in his case, as there was no law providing for a private soldier at the time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the committee to submit a remark or two, called forth by the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor]. He seems to think that the statute of limitations is a fraudulent statute, an unmanly statute, and is only invoked by somebody who wants to do injustice. Holding these views and living all his life in Ohio, I greatly wonder that that statute has stood one holy minute in the laws of that State. [Laughter.]

Now, let us see a little about the statute of limitations, and if we are going to enlarge it in one case let us see how much there is to enlarge it in others. I recollect a statute of limitations, written upon the statute book away back in the late seventies provided that a soldier of the late war should not be entitled to arrears of pension dating back from his very disability where he did not claim it, unless he filed that claim by a certain day in

Mr. GROSVENOR. But gave notice to everybody to file. Mr. CANNON (continuing). And multiplied thousands of people never heard of it, and did not file at all. My friend says that this individual may not have heard of this and may not have brought his action. I submit to him that all are equally chargeable with a knowledge of the law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then how does your Government get along, when it pretended to have a knowledge of the law, and that was a false knowledge of the law?

Mr. CANNON. My Government has enacted the law and provided tribunals for construing it, and has fixed a statute of limitations in certain cases. Now, then, if we are going to have a tations in certain cases. Now, then, if we are going to have a little chancery of the Lord here, and are going to do justice without limitation, who speaks for the man who gets his pittance, when you know that multiplied thousands in the Volunteer Army are barred by the statute of limitation of 1880? Is there one of them on the retired list who gets, until he dies, $2,600 a year, with a commissioned officer's pay from 1861 to this time? If so, I pause for an environ. for an answer.

Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentle-

Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL (continuing). For a statement? It is to correct a mistake. I find by reference to the printed record of the compensation of army officers that the regular pay of a retired major is $1,875; so that I was not very far out of the way. Now, there is an additional amount for each additional five years' service, which makes, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], something over $2,000, after a service of twenty years, by reason of this longevity pay.

Mr. CANNON. He is getting it.

Mr. BROMWELL. He is not getting all of it.

Mr. CANNON. He is getting it now, and you want him to get back pay to '50 or '60, and so on.

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not want anything of the kind.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). When he is cetting it from day to

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not want anything of the kind.
Mr. CANNON (continuing). When he is getting it from day to day. I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that the presence of people in Washington—not improperly, I do not claim that—frequently has much to do with legislation. The thousands are not here. You meet about the corridors of the Capitol, and in the streets, and at the hotels, and in the boarding houses gentlemen upon the retired list. You meet them socially. Fairly well taken care of, not too much. The result is, from time to time that in the Congress, which is ever changing, there comes legislation for longevity pay. Why, until this discussion came on there is not one of us in twenty in this House that understood what longevity pay meant. I commenced talking about it, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Steele] had to tell me about it; and yet it abounds, do you not see, in legislation; and then, with the laws construed for a whole generation, somebody discovers that there is a chance to recover, and sues in the Court of Claims. I am not going to intimate that at times the Court of Claims is like "necessity"—knows no law—but they sometimes Claims is like "necessity"—knows no law—but they sometimes give constructions to the law that you and I never dreamed of, or even the gentleman from Ohio. And now, being barred by the statute, being cared for at $2,600 a year, the gentleman from Ohio said, "Let us remove the bar of the statute and give the claimant $4,000 at one leap." Why, that is not much money. How many are to follow after I know not. If I had my way about it, where public officials are cared for enough to meet every want, where public officials are cared for enough to meet every want, with food, clothing, and house to care for them when they are no longer able, I would not give more by affirmative action of the legislative power until the Treasury was in a condition that I could do some little meed of justice to the millions of menequally patriotic that are getting nothing but a bare pittance.

One word in conclusion. The gentleman from New York, in this case, as on other occasions, has thought proper to make a fling at the Government of the United States, saying that it is dishonest and dishonorable in its treatment of its creditors. I deny if In my indement no government the ever existed has

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to make a correction? Occasionally an Ohio man does come from New York, but I am not that man, and if the gentleman revises the remarks he has just made, I hope he will see to it that I am properly located in other matters. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think New York is entitled to one Cabinet office, and the gentleman can be put in the other place, and I hope he will be, because then I shall know where to find a friend.

[Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the law? When this Government makes a contract with any person, and that contract is performed by that person under the law, the Government complies with its part and complies swiftly. If there be not a strict compliance, or a question of damages arises, there is the Court of Claims; there is every Federal court in the Union into which the citizen can go and bring his action against the Government. And as a mat-ter of fact claimants do all these things. They have their day in a court, and after they fail there they become claimants before

There is no law to control Congress in these matters. Why, we can vote $1,000,000 right out of the Treasury for any individual or for any purpose on earth. We have the power of appropriation, and there is nothing but our own consciences and a sound public sentiment to prevent us from abusing it. Therefore, as one Congress does not bind another, and as death steps in every ten or twenty years and changes the personnel of Congress, these claims, after they have been turned down time and time again, come up smiling to demand further consideration, because the claimant, or the representative of the claim, never dies. So it happens, because one of these old, stale claims which has been turned down again and again comes up again and is pushed here by somebody who is interested in it, that gentlemen who are mistaken, as I think my friend from Ohio is mistaken in this case, feel warranted in attacking the honor of the Government of the United States. It is a great Government and an honest Government, and I would rather favor a line of action that would tend to bar these claims by limitation after a reasonable time. If they were between private individuals they would never be heard of, because there the statute of limitations would operate. I wish that such a statute was written into the fixed law of the land, into the Constitution of the United States. It would be well for the Government and well for the people, and sometimes well for the reputation of every-

Now, that last remark is not particularly connected with this case, but I have felt justified in making these suggestions in reply to the remark of the gentleman from Ohio touching the conduct of the Government of the United States in these matters.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word. I now find the gentleman from Illinois planting himself upon a new ground altogether. He says that there are courts in the United States and that men may go into those courts and obtain judgment against the Government for what it owes them. Now, certainly within ninety days my friend will repudiate that doctrine, because I have known him to be even more vigorous than he is now to defeat this little claim in his endeavors to prevent the payment of judgments solemnly rendered in the United States courts in favor of individuals against the Government, judgments involving not merely a small amount, as in this case, but millions and millions of dollars

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman instance one case?
Mr. GROSVENOR. Easily. The French spoliation claims.
Mr. CANNON. Not at all. There was no judgment of the court there.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I could name others. I hope the gentleman has not forgotten.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have not forgotten; but of course the gentleman does not want to misrepresent me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. Then, too, we all remember the piece of strategy which he conceived in that wonderful brain of his and carried out with that wonderful intelligence of his, that left us all prostrate here who were in favor of paying those judgments. It was all fair and honorable, of course, but perhaps somewhat doubtful in the character of the management. [Laughter.]
Mr. CANNON. "And the villain still pursued her." [Laugh-

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this question has resolved itself down to this one point, whether this House will do the same justice to Major Stewart that it has already done in the case of the widow of Gen. Thomas L. Young and in the case of Lieut. Col. W. A. Jones. And I want to say right here that the gentleman from Illinois himself dictated last winter the language of the hill for the benefit of General Young's widow. the language of the bill for the benefit of General Young's widow, modified the bill as it was introduced by me and dictated the language in which it should be presented to this House. That bill passed the House, and it was nothing more than a longevity claim couched in language which made the money payable to the widow instead of to the soldier himself. Mr. CANNON. As the gentleman has referred to that matter, some explanation is proper; but it seems to me that it would be better for him to withdraw his remarks from the Record. Otherwise it is due to him and myself that a brief statement of the facts should be made. The gentleman knows that I objected to that legislation. He well understands that Thomas L. Young was a member of this House for many years, served in the Auguston. a member of this House for many years—served in the Army for many years. The gentleman knows what was his financial condi-tion and that of his family at the time of his death better than I The gentleman knows that without warrant of law we have fallen into the habit here of giving to the widows of deceased members of Congress the pay to which their husbands would have been entitled if they had lived.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman overlooks the essential point of the case. Mr. CANNON. Mr. CANNON. The gentleman knows the conversation that he and I had, and that the item making that appropriation was put on the bill in the shape in which it was with the purpose, as expressly stated by me, that it should not constitute a precedent putting it upon the ground of the action of Congress toward the families of members who had died while in service as such. And I do not defend it upon that ground. The gentleman and

And I do not defend it upon that ground. The gentleman and I can have no quarrel about the facts of the matter.

Mr. BROMWELL. The facts are exactly as I stated. That bill was a longevity claim, and it went through this House as such. It was a claim on behalf of the widow of Thomas L. Young, a former member of this House; but that fact made it no better and no worse than this claim of Major Stewart's.

Now, this House—and I had the facts read from the Clerk's desk—passed another bill—a bill for a lieutenant-colonel of engineers—a case in which there was no more claim and no more right and no more justice in favor of granting longevity pay than there is in this case of Major Stewart's. For all we know that lieutenantcolonel of engineers may have been a brave soldier. We do know from the records that Major Stewart was. Now, will this House blow hot with one breath and cold with another, or will it do the same justice to this gallant old Major Stewart that it has done to these other two officers? That is the question that comes before us.

I know it is the policy of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to endeavor to cut down here all claims, however just, that take any money out of the Treasury. I am just as responsible to my constituents as he is to his. Whenever there is a just claim of this kind that has gone before the Committee on Claims—whether it comes from the South or from the North, from the East or from the West-if the claim has been investigated and the East or from the West—If the claim has been investigated and found to be a just debt against this Government, I propose to stand here in my place and support it with my voice and my vote. A MEMBER. Without regard to the condition of the Treasury. Mr. BROMWELL. Without regard to the condition of the Treasury, an honest claim should be paid, and means should be provided for paying it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

be reported with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2741) for the relief of Peter Cook, of Arkansas; the bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Count of Claims in the case of Angustus P. Burditti. Peter Cook, of Arkansas; the bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt; the bill (H. R. 71) for the relief of Capt. Francis A. Beuter; the bill (H. R. 3075) for the relief of John A. Lynch, and the bill (H. R. 897) for the relief of James Stewart. He further reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3950) for the relief of William P. Buckmaster, had substituted therefor Senate bill No. 90, which they had directed him to report back with the recommendation that it lie on the table. He also reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 903) for the relief of Flora A. Darling, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, and with the recommendation that the bill be passed as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first of the bills just reported back from the Committee of the Whole.

PETER COOK.

The bill (H.R. 2741) for the relief of Peter Cook, of Arkansas (reported from the Committee of the Whole with a favorable recommendation), was taken up, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and

AUGUSTUS P. BURDITT.

The bill (H.R.130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt (reported from the Committee of the Whole with a favorable recommendation) was taken up, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FLORA A. DARLING.

The bill (H. R. 903) for the relief of Flora A. Darling (reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that it be passed with an amendment) was taken up and the amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "fifteen thousand six hundred and eighty-three dollars" and insert "$5,683."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on this bill, I desire to call the attention of the House to the facts as they are found in the findings of fact of the Court of Claims, accomare found in the findings of fact of the Court of Claims, accompanying the report. When I read these findings I can not believe that the Committee of the Whole, in recommending the passage of this bill, understood the facts as they are presented here. If the committee had understood them I am sure it could not have made such a recommendation as we have now before us. Prominent in findings of facts by the Court of Claims is the following: I should first say the claimant is the widow of a brigadiergeneral in the Confederate army, and the Court of Claims finds that the "claimant sympathized with her husband in political sentiment, and was disloyal to the Government of the United States."

It appears also that she was arrested as a suspected spy, and I can not believe, if the House understood fully the facts connected with the case, that it would be swift to recommend the payment of the claim in her behalf.

But, Mr. Speaker, aside altogether from the character of the claimant, there are not sufficient facts found accompanying the committee's report in presenting the claim to the House to justify a verdict in her favor at the hands of the House. Her claim is based on the alleged fact that certain Confederate bonds and certain State-bank notes, as well as money in silver and gold and jewels, were taken from her trunk while she was in custody. Ten thousand dollars of this amount was in Confederate cotton bonds, which, of course, the committee ignored and set aside altogether. But in addition to that amount there were said to be $5,000 in notes But in addition to that amount there were said to be $5,000 in notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee. Now, what were $5,000 in face value of the notes of the banks of the States of Louisiana and Tennessee worth in 1863? The Court of Claims do not find them to be worth anything, and there is no presumption that they were worth their face value. At that time both of these States were in the hands of the Federal soldiers, and I doubt—there being all kinds of State banks in Tennessee and Louisiana, as in all of the other States of the Union at that time—I doubt whether these had other States of the Union at that time-I doubt whether these had any value at all, and non constat that the $5,000 were worth $500, or $5, or 5 cents.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the report develops what bank in Tennessee the notes

Mr. DALZELL. It is not found. We are not informed. do not know what bank or banks issued the notes in question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the inquiry for the reason that some of the banks in Tennessee—their issues—were good as gold at all times

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Tennessee misunder-stands me, if I made the affirmation broad enough to cover all of the banks. I say that we do not have sufficient facts on which to the banks. I say that we do not have sumcient facts on which to base a verdict in the statement presented to us by the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee will concede that the issues of some of these banks at that time were practically worthless.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is true.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, the notes specified in this claim may have been of the insolvent banks.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me moment, I would like to ask my colleague to state what bank in Tennessee in 1863 had its notes at par with gold?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The State bank—

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). Well, whether they were or not, we do not know even that there were banks whose notes were worth their face value in gold; nor do we know, assuming that such banks were in existence, that these were the notes of such banks in this trunk, and non constat that they were worth anything like the amount named here.

I am reliably informed by a gentleman from Tennessee that some of the State-bank notes in 1863 were selling at 15 cents on the dollar. So, not to make a short story long, I end, as I began, by saying that it passes my belief that the House should be swift to vote $5,000 from the bankrupt Treasury of the United States to pay such a rotten claim as that presented on the face of this report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I only wish to add to my statement in respect to the Tennessee bank money that if the gentleman will read the report he will find that the reference is to the State Bank of Tennessee, not to the State banks, as I understand it, but to the institution known as the Bank of Tennessee.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken. Not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think you will find that to be the case, as I understood the reading of the report.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is mistaken. I will read from

The claimant placed in her trunk for safe-keeping $10,000 in Confederate cotton bonds, which had been issued the previous September, $5,000 in notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee, and so on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If that means the State Bank of Tennessee, that money was as good as gold.

Mr. DALZELL. It does not mean it, and does not say so, but on the contrary it expressly says State banks of Tennessee and

Mr. RICHARDSON. We had some private banks in the State at that time which would have been perfectly good, and others that were undoubtedly bad, but the Bank of Tennessee was as good as gold all along.

Mr. DALZELL. Where in the State of Tennessee was that bank doing business in 1863?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was not doing business in Tennessee; but its assets were in gold.

Mr. HEPBURN. Where was it redeeming its notes at that

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know; but the notes would have been redeemed if presented to the bank, because the bank existed. Its assets were removed from Nashville, and it was kept up as a separate organization, and redeemed its notes at all times during separate organization, and redeemed its notes at all times during the war and subsequent to the war—never failed to do so. The assets of the bank were in the hands of honest men.

Mr. DALZELL, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], an examination of this report will show, I think, that the committee has treated this claim as though this applicant was a citizen of some other country. The citations here of international law might apply if country. The citations here of international law might apply if this claimant was a citizen of Great Britain or France or Ger-many; but what application they have in this case I fail to apprehend.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The Confederates were belligerents

Mr. BLUE. Unless it be claimed that this applicant was not Mr. BLUE. Unless to be claimed that this applicant was not only a sympathizer with the cause of the South, but an actual resident of the South, and treating the South as a foreign country, I heartily approve of all that has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and if this bill is to be passed, it will be found to form a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennesses [Mr. Cox].

Tennessee [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if I catch that report, this case is that of the wife of a husband who was disloyal to the Union. She bases her claim upon the idea that certain State-bank notes that were taken from her, and probably improperly taken (although I do not stop to inquire about that), were equivalent to gold. Part of those notes were notes of the State bank, or the banks of Tennessee, and it is asserted that those notes were equivalent to gold in 1863. Now, I undertake to say there was no State-bank note—I put it as strongly as I can—that there was no State-bank note redeemable in gold in 1863.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. COX.

I will, with pleasure. VER. The redemption of Louisiana bank notes in Mr. BOATNER. gold was suspended during the war, by a military order of General Butler.

Mr. COX.

Mr. BOATNER. It was soon after General Butler assumed command of the city of New Orleans, and from that time on, as long as that order was enforced, the notes were not redeemed in long as that order was enforced, the notes were not redeemed in gold. Those notes, however, circulated at par, and the only reason why they were not redeemed and retired by the bank was because of the military order which prevented it. Those notes were redeemed after the war in gold coin of the United States, and never were below par since 1856.

Mr. COX. Oh, well; I understand that. Here is the history and the truth of the thing. The State-bank notes of the State of Tennessee—and 1 talk about the State-bank notes, not about the various banks of the State—were bought up after the war at from 15 to 25 cents on the dollar. Then the Supreme Court of the United States decided that they were receivable in payment of taxes, and they went to par.

taxes, and they went to par.

Now, whatever may be my sympathy concerning a claim of this kind, I am not going to sit here and vote to appropriate money for the payment of a claim for the seizure of State-bank notes of the State of Louisiana, upon a gold basis, when I know those notes were selling for not more than 25 to 50 cents on the dollar. Mr. BOATNER. Does the gentleman say that Louisiana bank notes were ever sold at 15 to 20 cents on the dollar?

Mr. COX. I submit you could not cash a Louisiana bank note, in 1863, for 30 cents on the dollar in gold.

Mr. BOATNER. Do you know anybody that ever tried to do it?

Mr. COX. Did you ever try to do it?
Mr. BOATNER. No; I never did; but I know, if the gentleman will allow me, that during the entire period of the war Louisiana bank notes, wherever they circulated throughout the country, adjacent to New Orleans, were considered and treated as at par with gold. They were better than greenbacks, because greenbacks were subject to a discount, while the bank notes were considered as good as gold, and were redeemed in gold after the

Mr. COX. Oh, I know how they were retired. I understand that

Mr. BOATNER. If they ever were sold at a discount, I never heard of it.

Mr. COX. But you and I know that there was not a Louisiana bank note nor a note of the State Bank of Tennessee that was redeemable in gold in 1863. You know it as well as I do.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill under continuous continuous section.

sideration on the table.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Texas?
Mr. COOPER of Texas. I made the report upon this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman want? Mr. COOPER of Texas. Why, Mr. Speaker, would I not have the right to control the time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have the right to control the time if he had asked for it at the time the bill was presented, but the gentleman did not do so.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas five

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I sought all the opportunities I could to get the floor. The SPEAKER.

The Chair was not aware of it. The Chair did not see anybody rising but the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas. The hour is near when we have to take a recess.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to be placed in the attitude of having to discuss this bill in five minutes. I made the report on the vill, and am the introducer of the measure, and ought not to have my time controlled by another; but I will undertake to say in that five minutes what I think and know about this bill.

This is the first time that the question has ever been raised as to the value of the property taken from this lady. This bill has been in a number of branches of the Government, judicial and legislative. It was examined by a quasi judicial organization in 1866, and the value of this property was not questioned. It was subsequently examined by the Court of Claims, and you will find from the report of the Court of Claims that they estimated the value of these bank notes at $5,000. In the Fiftieth Congress a favorable report of the committee was made upon this bill, and it passed one branch. Thereafter, in a number of Congresses—I can not now recall the number—this bill has been before one branch or other of Congress, has invariably passed one branch, and this is the first time the question was ever raised as to the value of the property or bank notes.

Now, there are gentlemen upon this floor from Louisiana and from Tennessee who know the value of those notes at that time, and they state to you that their specie value was their face value. Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen a more meritorious case presented to the United States Congress than this. The beneficiary was a woman devoted to the Union, who was hostile to secession and objected to the dissolution of the Union, and probably on this account was temporarily separated from her husband, but went to him when wounded in battle and stayed with him until he died. She on a passport and under a flag of truce granted her by died. She on a passport and under a flag of truce granted her by a Federal general was undertaking to return to her home when she was arrested, her trunk opened, and this property taken there-from. She has been knocking at the doors here for many years, seeking relief at the hands of Congress, which tribunal alone can give her relief.

She now resides in the State of New York, and she never resided in the South except for a brief period. Her declaration as to the value of the property taken is not disputed, nor has it been criticised by any branch of the Government or any committee to which it has ever heretofore been referred, but now, for the first time, a question has been raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that these notes were not of their specie value. Now, gentlemen of this Congress, have you any witness, have you any proof to the contrary? Are you willing to take his statement or the statement of the Court of Claims and of the several committees of Congress, of the several branches of Congress that have heretofore acted upon this measure, wherein they have virtually—incidentally, if not positively—passed upon the question that these notes are of the specie value named on their face?

It is a case for you to determine. I have no interest in the mat-

I do not even know the beneficiary in this bill. It was referred to me as a member of the Committee on War Claims, and I made a most careful examination of the case and reported it to the committee, and the committee has twice since I have been upon it unanimously favorably reported this bill and recommended These matters were discussed in the committee, and its passage. never before has the value of these notes been attacked. The bill originally provided for the payment of bonds given by the Confederate government, known as "gold cotton bonds." These bonds have been excluded from the bill, and we are only asking relief for the money—the notes of the Bank of Louisiana and of Tennessee—and the jewelry that she had in her trunk.

Mr. COX. Will you pardon me one moment? Will the gentleman tell me

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Certainly, with pleasure, if I can.
Mr. COX (continuing). What notes of the Bank of Tennessee are you talking about?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It is declared by the Court of Claims to be State-bank notes, and the plural that was used, I think, meant the State Bank of Tennessee and the State Bank of Louisiana.

Mr. COX. It was in 1863 they took the property. These bank notes in 1863 were selling for not more than 25 cents on the dollar.

A MEMBER. Oh!
Mr. COX. I know what I am talking about.
Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Has the Court of Claims passed upon this particular case?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It has, and the court says this with respect to it:

Claimant placed in her trunk for safe-keeping $10,000 in Confederate cotton bonds, which had been issued the previous September, $5,000 in notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee, $28 in gold, $15 in silver, and a collection of jewelry worth $640.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Did the Court of Claims fix the value of the property thus taken from the lady?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. They stated that it was taken from the lady.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. But did they by their order and decision fix the value of it?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No.
Mr. SWANSON. If the lady had the notes of the State banks of Louisiana and Tennessee now, she could get $5,000 for them, could she not?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. She could get $5,000 in gold for them. so I am informed.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, if, as the gentleman states, this is the first time that the value of these notes has been called in question, that is simply confirmatory of what we all understand to be the fact, that cases of this kind are put together very loosely and do not receive the careful consideration that they ought to receive. The one essential fact which the Court of Claims ought to have found in order to enter a judgment, if it had had authority to enter judgment, is the very fact which it omitted to find, to wit, the value of these State-bank notes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. McMILLIN. Greenbacks were below par at that time, were they not?

Mr. DALZELL. In 1863? Of course.

Mr. McMILLIN. If greenbacks had been taken, does the gentleman insist that it would be a legitimate part of the inquiry of the court to ascertain what the value of the greenback was at that

Mr. DALZELL. Most assuredly. Mr. McMILLIN. And that settlement of the case could be properly made only on that basis?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, the value at the date of conversion is the test

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman confounds the reduction in value of a commodity originally at par with the case of one that from worthlessness went up and ultimately came to be good. The State-bank notes of Tennessee were good. All those notes were redeemed, as has been stated by my colleague and others, and it has also been shown here by the statement of the gentleman from Louisiana that at the very time in question the Statebank notes of Louisiana were as good as gold and remained so, and that that money was only prevented from circulating by a military order, which was made, I suppose, to prevent contracts being made in disregard of the greenback currency. It strikes me, therefore, that the correct rule would be to determine what that property would be worth now if it had not been taken.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no. The measure of damages is the value at the time of conversion. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill under consideration on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DALZELL, there ayes 54, noes 45.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.
The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair thinks the House must be counted.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Texas withdraw the point of no quorum, and that, by unanimous consent, we now take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is pretty evident that there is not a quorum here, and if the House takes now the recess that it would take under the rule a few minutes later, that will leave this question to be determined hereafter.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; if the gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of no quorum, the bill will go over until a week from

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I did not understand the suggestion

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, leaving the question on the pending bill where it is at present.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill will have the same right a week from to-day that it has now.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then I understand the parliamentary situation would be that this bill could not come up until next Friday

A MEMBER. It could not come up again in any case until next Friday.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in order to get out of the complication, I suggest that the gentleman from Texas withdraw his point of no quorum with the agreement that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to lay the bill on the table shall still be pending. Otherwise, if the gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of no quorum the vote already taken is a decision of the question. But he can withdraw his point with an agree-ment that the pending motion to lay the bill on the table shall remain undetermined.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes, sir.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum, and unauimous consent is asked that the question upon the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to lay the bill on the table shall be still pending, unaffected by any vote that has been taken upon it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER announced that Mr. PAYNE would act as Speaker pro tempore at the evening session; and the House then, on motion of Mr. DINGLEY (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p.m., Mr. PAYNE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the second clause of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p.m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Hepburn in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business under clause 2 of Rule XXVI.

The Clerk will report the first bill in order.

URIAH ANDRICKS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1948) to grant a pension to Uriah Andricks, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Uriah Andricks, late of Company H, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month, for loss of hearing and enlargement of the spleen.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as fol-

Strike out of seventh line the word "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fourteen," and insert between the words "late" and "of," in line 6, the word "private."

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read. The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1948) granting a pension to Uriah Andricks, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, submit the following report:

This soldier was enrolled as a private May 1, 1882, in Company H, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteers, and was mustered out May 3, 1885. His service and discharge are honorable. He was pensioned under act of July 14, 1862, for enlargement of spleen, a disease of service origin, at $2 per month. This pension was increased under act of June 27, 1890, to $12 per month. He was dropped March 25, 1895, and a reissue made to him under act of March 2, 1895, at $8 per month.

The committee have examined a vast mass of testimony of physicians and neighbors which was filed in the case, and also other evidence submitted to the committee. The last examination by a medical board shows him disabled fourteen-eighteenths. The other testimony fully shows that he is incapacitated for manual labor. The witnesses are all shown by letters received by the Pension Office to be credible. There is no doubt in the minds of the committee that his disability is of service origin. Indeed, the Pension Bureau concede such to be the case. The committee believe injustice was done this soldier by dropping him, thus reversing the former finding and decision of the Office. There is no doubt in the minds of the committee but that under the general law this claimant is entitled to $14 per month.

We recommend, therefore, the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out of seventh line the word "twenty-four" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "private."

Mr. ERDMAN. I should like the gentleman in charge of this

Mr. ERDMAN. I should like the gentleman in charge of this bill to answer a question or two, if he can. What was the reason assigned for the reissue in the case of this soldier at the rate of only $6 a month instead of $12, which he had been receiving?

Mr. WOOD. That is a question which I am unable to answer. That is one of those things which sometimes occur of which it is impossible to find out the reason.

Mr. ERDMAN. Has this soldier made application at the Bureau for an increase?

Mr. WOOD. I think not. Mr. ERDMAN. Is there any reason why an increase should

Mr. ERDMAN. Is there any reason why an increase should not be allowed him by the Bureau?

Mr. WOOD. I know of no reason except the fact that this pension, having been raised to $12 a month, was then on investigation, to "purge the pension roll," reduced to $6 a month. I think that action was in the face of the testimony on file. I never saw the soldier, to my recollection, until recently, and it does not require any medical testimony to show that he is totally incapacitated for manual labor; his appearance indicates that. There are numerous affidavits, medical and otherwise, and a large amount of testimony showing, I think conclusively, that this man ought to be pensioned at $14 a month.

Mr. ERDMAN. I should like the gentleman to give us some reason why by special bill we ought to give this soldier an increase of pension. It does not appear from the report why the Bureau would not grant the increase if application were made. Why should application be made to this House as long as there is a road open through the Pension Bureau?

Mr. WOOD. The Bureau having reduced this pension from $12 to $6, it would be an idle thing to appeal to the Bureau to grant an increase to $14. I think it would be entirely idle for this soldier to make application to the Pension Office either for a restora-dier to make application to the Pension Office either for a restoration of his former pension or for an increase.

Mr. ERDMAN. Have you not found that the Bureau, on application for increase, has repeatedly increased pensions?

Mr. WOOD. I have found many more instances where they have refused to do so; and in this case they have practically refused by cutting down the pension of the soldier.

Mr. ERDMAN. But the reason is not stated why they have cut it down. I should like to get at the inside of this case; but it seems impossible to do so.

The question being taken, the amendments reported by the

The question being taken, the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GRAY'S BATTALION OF ARKANSAS VOLUNTEERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1061) granting pension to Gray's Battalion of Arkansas Volunteers. The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but was interrupted by Mr. PICKLER, who said: Mr. Chairman, I believe that bill is not in order now. It is a general bill.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Is a point of order made against the bill? Mr. TERRY. I desire to state—

Mr. PICKLER. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TERRY. I wish to state that this bill was introduced by my colleague, General Neill, who is unavoidably absent this evening. I understand that at the last session there was some point made against the bill. General Neill has been looking into the authorities on the question, and I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice until he can have an opportunity to be heard. to be heard

Mr. PICKLER. No objection.

The CHAIRMAN. At the last session this bill, as the Chair is informed, was held to be a public bill, and not within the order of business under which we are now operating. But the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. I believe, Mr. Chairman, a point was made against the bill, but I do not think it was finally ruled upon. Gendle New York and the second of th eral NeILL wanted to be heard upon it, and has some authorities which he wishes to present. I therefore desire that the bill be passed over without prejudice, in order to give my colleague a chance to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without losing its place until next Friday evening. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EMELINE FILGATE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1631) granting a pension to Emeline Filgate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emeline Filgate, widow of James Filgate, late of Company G, Sixth United States Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES L. WING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to James L. Wing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, James L. Wing, of Mount Vernon, Ohio, late private Company G, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on its passage.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case. The report (by Mr. Kerr) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:
The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R.
Mil) granting a pension to James L. Wing, submit the following report:
The soldier, James L. Wing, was a private in Company G, Forty-third Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He enlisted November 25, 1861, and was honorably discharged October 21, 1862.
He is now drawing a pension of $12 per month for hernia and heart disease, both of which are accepted as of service origin. His claim upon the ground of deafness was not accepted by the Pension Office as of service origin, and that claim was disallowed.
The Mansfield, Ohio, pension medical board examined soldier and rated his disability as being sixteen-eighteenths on inguinal hernia, varicocele, and disease of the heart. Upon this examination and rating he was allowed $12 per month.

On May 20, 1801, the same medical board examined soldier and found the following disabilities and gave him the following rating: "Hernia, eighteighteenths: disease of the heart, four-eighteenths, and ten-thirtieths total deafness of left ear."

There is no question arising upon the disabilities for which pension was granted, only that it seems to the committee that upon a disability amounting to sixteen-eighteenths and of service origin a higher rate than $12 amonth should have been allowed. The evidence shows that from these disabilities alone he is wholly disabled from doing manual labor.

The real question, however, relates to the deafness, which was rejected by the Pension Bureau. The evidence upon that point is very full, and seems almost conclusive. Upon what ground the pension officer rejected this claim is not easily seen. The witnesses are credible, and are certainly definite enough in their statements that their evidence should be taken as establishing the facts to which they attest.

A special examiner took evidence upon this point, and among other witnesses examined was Amos Bishop, a comrade of Wing's, who testified in part as follows:

"I recall fact that while we were near Corinth, Miss., at Farmington, Miss., about middle or last of May soldier one evening come into camp after having supported artillery, and I noticed at that time that he was picking at one ear as if something was in it. The next day I asked him about it and he said there was a buzzing in his head; that something was wrong in his head. I asked him if it was because he had cold, and some one of the boys spoke up and said that that was not the trouble, but that it was due to the artillery firing. After that I noticed that he was hard of hearing."

The witness gives much more evidence on this line showing that soldier continued deaf until he left the service.

Other witnesses testify that when soldier went into the Army his hearing was perfect, an

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to and the bill as amended laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ADELAIDE MORRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Adelaide Morris, widow of the late Arthur Morris, formerly captain of the Fourth United States Artillery, at the rate of $50 per month, which rate of $50 per month shall be in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report. The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8.757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 92) as their own, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-five."

[Senate Report No. 92, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8.757) granting an increase of pension to Adelaide Morris, have examined the same and

report:

A bill passed the Senate at the last session of Congress making au increase in the pension of claimant, but it failed to be acted upon in the House of Representatives. A reexamination of the military record of Captain Morris reveals the fact that it was one of extraordinary merit, full of hardships and exposure.

The former report was as follows:

STATEMENT IN RELATION TO SERVICES OF THE LATE ARTHUR MORRIS, MAJOR FOURTH ARTILLERY, UNITED STATES ARMY.

MAJOR FOURTH ARTILLERY, UNITED STATES ARMY.

At the battle of Antictam, September 17, 1832, Lieutenant Morris's battery was so hotly engaged that its captain (Hazard) was killed and half its men were sacrificed. Lieutenant Morris distinguished himself greatly in this action. The battery was saved by his bravery, and he was rewarded for his gallantry by receiving the brevet rank of captain before he was 19 years of age.

In the action at Charlestown, Va., Lieutenant Morris volunteered for the occasion. In this engagement Lieutenant Morris narrowly escaped with his life, being struck by a spent ball, the mark of which he carried to his grave. He was personally congratulated on the field of battle for his bravery by General Hancock, who was in command.

From November, 1863, to August, 1865, Lieutenant Morris was on staff duty at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md. In 1865-1867 he was onduty at the following posts: Fort Brown, Tex: Reynolds Barracks, Washington, D. C.; Fort Washington, Va.; Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., and in 1869 on recruiting duty in New York City.

In 1869 Lieutenant Morris was transferred to Fort Riley, Kans. While there he was sent with Light Battery B, Fourth Artillery, serving as cavalry, on the Salmon River Indian campaign, and was on scouting duty all the summer of 1870.

From Fort Riley Lieutenant Morris was again ordered to Fort McHenry, Md., and remained there from 1871 to 1872. From May, 1872, to June, 1873, Lieutenant Morris served at the Artillery School at Fort Monroe, Va.

In June, 1873, he was transferred to the Pacific Coast, and was stationed successively at Alcatraz Island, Black Point (San Francisco Harbor), Fort Canby, Oreg.; Sitka, Alaska; again at Fort Canby, Oreg., and again at Alcatraz Island.

Besides serving at these different posts while on the Pacific Coast, Captain Morris took a very active part in the Modoc campaign in the winter of 1873, and in the Nez Percés campaign in Liahe, July 11 and 12, under Gen. O. O. Howard. In the reports of this battle made by General Howard Captain Morris is mentioned in the following terms:

"Capt. Arthur Morris, Fourth Artillery: This flow had commany in the final chip." He behaved most gailantly, keeping himself in advance of the line of his company, leading and urging his men forward. Throughout the campaign he was always energetic and cheerful in the discharge of his duties.

"Capt. Arthur Morris in the was always energetic and cheerful in the discharge of his duties." For the company, leading and urging his men forward. Throughout the campaign he was always energetic and cheerful in the discharge of his duties.

"Capt. Arthur Morris Fourth Artillery; For gailant service in action against the hostile New Fercés and particularly the final charge, I recommend the brevet of major." Agricularly the final charge, I recommend the brevet of major."

During Captain Morris's service on the Pacific Coast he was one of the many officers who suffered severely from the great depreciation currency, when everything at that time was on a gold basis throughout California. Lieutenant Morris received his promotion as captain, Fourth United States Artillery, on January 10, 1877, while stationed at Sitas, Alaska.

When his regiment was ordered East ermained until September, 1882. He was then ordered to Fort Adams, Newport, R. I., and remained there until his retirement, October 5, 1887.

Major Morris was attacked with during the remainder of his life. His physicanes attributed to it the disease from which he died, September 28, 1862.

From the time of his retirement, October 5, 1887, to the time of his death, September 23, 1882, and orective the shade of the count of the original disease having shown itself while Major Morris was a first lieutenant, his widow has only been allowed

During the reading of the report,
Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. This seems to be a meritorious bill, and one that ought to be passed.
Mr. ERDMAN. No; I object to that. There is some very interesting matter later on that I think we ought to have.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report as

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desired to have this lengthy report read and spread upon the records of this House for the reason that we have discovered, apparently, a new cause of pension. This will be apparent when you have passed this bill. It is contained in the third paragraph on the second page of the report, and reads as follows:

During Captain Morris's service on the Pacific Coast he was one of the many officers who suffered severely from the great depreciation in currency, the officers receiving their monthly pay from the Government in greenbacks when everything at that time was on a gold basis throughout California.

It seems that we have now attacked the financial question in our pension legislation, and a distinct new class of pensioners is provided for. Here we are granting a pension because of the depreciation of the currency.

It is possible that we are thus preparing the way when the 16 to 1 comes to be in a position to pension all of the people that suffer from that cause.

Mr. PICKLER. My colleague [Mr. Miles] in preparing this report simply followed the Senate report.

I hope, however, that some new cause of pensions will be discovered to satisfy the gentleman from Pennsylvania and induce him to vote for some of these bills.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JANE CHRISTIAN MARYE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5902) granting a pension to Jane Christian Marge.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, anthorized and directed to place the name of Jane Christian Marge, only child and heir of W. S. Jett, late a soldier of the Revolutionary war, on the pension roll as a dependent daughter, to be paid a pension at the rate of $30 per month; also that the said Jane Christian Marge shall, in consequence of the passage of this act, be entitled to have and receive back pay and allowances, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Change the spelling of claimant's surname to "Marye," and strike out the words "and heir," in line 5; strike out the word "thirty," in line 7, and substitute therefor the word "twelve;" strike out all after the word "month," in line 8. Also amend the title of the bill.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.
The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

519) granting a pension to Ira Harris.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take up Senate bill No. 2711, to be found on page 64 of the Calendar, it being the same as the House bill, and put it upon its passage.

The motion was agreed to. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Ira Harris, a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month on and after the passage of this act.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case read. The report (by Mr. Thomas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8.2711) granting a pension of $50 per month to Ira Harris, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, respectfully report that on March 16, 1896, it reported House bill 519 for same beneficiary, at $50 per month, couched in substantially the same language as Senate bill 2711.

Your committee therefore favorably report this bill (8.2711), with the recommendation that same be substituted for House bill 519 when same is reached, and passed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the House bill of the same title will lie on the table. Is there objection?
Mr. ERDMAN. I desire to know what the status of this bill is.

There was a substitution in the Senate of their bill for ours and

The House there is a substitution of our bill for theirs.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, the committee has substituted the Senate bill, and the Chair was submitting to the House the question whether or no the House bill should lie upon the table. If there is no objection, that order will be made. upon the table. If there is There was no objection.

FREDERICK A. DRISCOL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4655) granting a pension to Frederick A. Driscol.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick A. Driscol, of Denver, Colo., late sergeant Company E. Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Ninth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, for a pension at the rate of $12 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside this bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. Andrews) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 4655) granting a pension to Frederick A. Driscol, having considered the same, respectfully report:

Frederick A. Driscol enlisted May 26, 1862, and was honorably discharged

September 2, 1862; reenlisted September 18, 1862, and honorably discharged September 18, 1863, on surgeon's certificate of disability.

On November 4, 1891, and also on January 25, 1896, he applied for pension under act of June 27, 1890.

The examination made by the pension board of surgeons of Denver, Colo, on March 16, 1862, gives a total rating of twelve-eighteenths, and the examination made by the Denver board on September 25, 1895, gives a total disability rating of twenty-eighteenths, but both applications were rejected as not ratably disabled under act of June 27, 1890.

Claimant alleges that his disease of eye was incurred at Fredericksburg. Va., and that he suffered with aphonia, chronic inflammation of respiratory organs, cough and ulceration of throat, rheumatism, and heart disease contracted in service, and with kidney disease and affection of ears contracted since service, but at this late date is unable to satisfactorily establish his claim of service origin; and that he is totally unfitted for manual labor, and is wholly dependent upon his own labor for the support of himself and family.

He has a hospital record of "aphonia" February 9 to 27, 1863, when he was furloughed from Mount Pleasant Hospital, Washington, D. C. He was "absentick" April 30, 1863, and applied for fifteen days' extension of furlough.

Dr. C. C. Brace filed May 28, 1894, that claimant's case was one of hypertrophy of heart, chronic bronchitis, defective vision of one eye, and chronic pharyngitis. Disabilities permanent, and thinks him incapable of performing manual labor.

Dr. A. K. Worthington testified, same date:

"He has converging strabismus of left eye, counts fingers at 1 foot, right eye normal: there is minute crepitation of lower lobe of right lung, axillary line, and in posterior parts; the heart apex is at sixth intercostal space, systolic impulse palpable in epigastrium; pulse rate 100 standing; the heart is hypertrophied and he has chronic bronchitis; he has also chronic pharyngitis, not due to vicious habits. Di

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out of line 6 the words "of Denver, Colo."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. And in line 10 I move to amend by striking out all after the word "month."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, strike out, after the word "month," the words "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LAURETTA S. PRINCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2620) to place the name of Lauretta S. Prince on the pension roll. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at $20 per month, the name of Lauretta S. Prince, daughter of Henry Prince, late a private in Company D, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 5, before the word "daughter," insert the word "dependent."

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman. The report (by Mr. Kerr) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Kerr) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2620) to place the name of Lauretta S. Prince on the pension roll, submit the following report:

This bill is to give a pension to Lauretta S. Prince, as the dependent daughter of Henry Prince, late a private in Company D. One hundred and fortythird Regiment Ohio Volunteers. The father was granted a pension of $12 per month, and drew the same until his death, which occurred in 1894. The widow was granted a pension. She died in 1895.

The ground upon which this bill rests is the dependent and helpless condition of the daughter. She is an epileptic and wholly incapable of taking care of herself during the attacks of epilepsy and unfit for any labor or employment by which to maintain herself.

These attacks are very frequent—as many as four, five, and more in a day. Her condition requires attendance and care from others, and it seems that she comes within the spirit of law relating to dependents. She has no property or income, and is a proper subject for legislation as the committee conceives.

The committee therefore recommends the passage of the bill with the following amendment. viz:

In line 5, before the word "daughter," insert the word "dependent."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be amended

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be amended by striking out the word "twenty" and inserting the word "eight," This is a daughter—
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. ERDMAN. It is proposed in this bill to give a daughter more than the father, who was a soldier, received, and more than the mother, who was the widow of a soldier, received. Now, at the mother, who was the widow of a soldier, received. Now, at this late day, it is proposed that the daughter shall have as much as both of them put together.

Mr. McClellan. She comes from Ohio, though.

Mr. ERDMAN. For the reason stated, I move the amendment. Mr. TAYLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment proposed will not prevail, for the reason that the beneficiary of this bill is, as stated in the report, a helpless epileptic. In the very nature of things the infirmity growing out of that is increasing, and in the nature of things, also, she can not very long be a burden upon a generous country. I hope that this poor woman, who has no one to help her, will be pensioned at the full rate allowed by the bill.

who has no one to help her, will be pensioned at the full rate allowed by the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will suggest that there is no precedent for $8 a month. All dependent daughters get $12 a month if they are pensioned at all.

A MEMBER. Or twenty.

ters get $12 a month if they are pensioned at all.

A MEMBER. Or twenty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment striking out "twenty" and inserting "eight."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TAYLER. There is an error in the middle initial of this beneficiary's name in the bill. I move an amendment, in the body of the bill and also in the title, that the name read "Loretta L. Prince."

Mr. PICKLER. Since the

Mr. PICKLER. Since the gentleman is amending the title, I will suggest that it be amended by striking out the words "to place the name of Loretta S. Prince on the pension roll" and insert the words "granting a pension to Loretta L. Prince."

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order now. The constitution is one agreeing to the amendment proposed by the com-question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLEN], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the body of the bill and also in the title insert in lieu of the words "Loretta S. Prince" the words "Loretta L. Prince."

Mr. PICKLER. Now I move to strike out the words "to place the name of Loretta S. Prince on the pension roll" and insert the words "granting a pension to Loretta L. Prince." The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "to place the name of Loretta S. Prince on the pension roll" and insert the words "granting a pension to Loretta L. Prince."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. TAYLER as amended was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA A. FOSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3499) granting a pension to Eliza A. Foss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza A. Poss, of Manchester, N. H., widow of Henry T. Foss, late corporal of Company C, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairma The report (by Mr. Sulloway) was read, as follows: Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. Sulloway) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3499) granting a pension to Eliza A Foss, having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

Henry T. Foss enlisted August 16, 1864, in Company C, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery, and was honorably discharged June 15, 1865. He was married to the claimant July 4, 1856, and died April 27, 1874.

The beneficiary named in the bill filed application for pension, alleging the death cause to have been contracted in the service, and the claim was approved for admission. The medical referee, however, failed to find the "sequence," and therefore rejected the same.

The ostensible cause of the soldier's death was cancer. The hospital records show that he was treated for malarial poisoning, disease of liver, and jaundice while in the service, and three comrades depose to the same effect. Several persons who knew the soldier ten to twenty years before the war testify as to his unusually robust constitution and prior soundness, and continuance is fully established from discharge to death.

The medical evidence shows that on account of the man's diseased condition he fell an easy prey to the inroads made by the cancer, and is to the effect that the same was caused thereby. It further indicates that death would soon have ensued from his service disabilities in any event.

The widow is 60 years of age, has no property or income except a pension of $8, which she receives under the act of June 27, 1890, is wholly unable to earn a support, and in every way a worthy woman.

The effect of the bill is to increase her pension $$\frac{3}{2}$ fer month, and your committee recommend its passage with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the words "of Manchester, N. H.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH PORTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1945) granting a pension to Joseph Porter.

The bill was read.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman, during the first session of this Congress a bill was passed in favor of Mr. Porter and was signed by the President. I therefore ask that that bill lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ADAM DENNIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4744) to increase the pension or Adam Dennis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Adam Dennis, of Manns Choice, Bedford County, Pa., late a soldier in Company G, Seventy-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and that he receive a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. HARDY. Let us have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. ERDMAN) is as follows:

Mr. HARDY. Let us have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. Erdman) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4744) to increase the pension of Adam Dennis, after duly considering the same, respectfully report as follows:

Adam Dennis enlisted on the 1st of October, A. D. 1861, as private soldier in Company G, Seventy-ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. On the 8th of October, 1862, at the battle of Perryville, Ky., he received a severe gunshot wound in his left groin, and at the battle of Chickamauga, September 19, 1863, received a severe wound in his left leg, about 5 or 6 inches above the knee. From the effect of these wounds his leg was amputated, and he now draws a pension of $30 per month for loss of leg below the knee.

The amputation was made in a hurried and careless manner, and the fibula bone is 1½ inches shorter than the tibia, and both bones protrude, with not sufficient flaps to cover them, and for many years the pensioner has not been able to use an artificial limb but a small portion of the time, and weakened the hip joint that his left side is partially paralyzed from the effects of the wound and the attendant suffering. The pension received is but for the loss of leg below the knee, and the severe wound in the groin is not taken into consideration in his rating. This rating is insufficient, and the pensioner should receive a pension equal at least to the loss of a leg, as the paralyzed condition of the pensioner's left side and his inability to wear an artificial limb entitles him, in the judgment of your committee, to the rating for the entire loss of his limb, and this, in consideration of his extreme suffering, would be but a proper consideration. In addition to the wounds referred to, the pensioner suffers severely from nasal catarrh, which was contracted in the Army. This disease now affects his bronchial tubes and lungs.

From communications placed before the committee, it was apparent that the Department recognized th

"Statement of injuries of Adam Dennis, Company G, Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers."

"My injuries are as follows: Gunshot wound in left groin, stiffening and weakening the hip joint; left leg off 5 inches below the knee; fibula bone linches shorter than the tibia, with both bones protruding, no flaps to cover bones, making it impossible to use an artificial limb most of the time without suffering and endangering my life. Whole left side partially affected by those wounds. Have also nasal catarrh, contracted in the Army, which now affects bronchial tubes and lungs. Heart also affected; can't say from what cause.

"ADAM DENNIS."

"Company G, Seventy-Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

"Bedford County, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace in and for the aforesaid county, Adam Dennis, who, being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and say that the above statement is true and correct.

"Sworn and subscribed this 20th day of January, A. D. 1896.

"CHAS. REILEY, Justice of the Peace."

Your committee, therefore, in view of all the facts in this case, recommend that the pension of Adam Dennis be increased from $30 per month, which he now receives, to the sum of $50 per month, which your committee believes he is justly entitled to, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

During the reading of the report,
Mr. HARDY. I ask that the Clerk suspend the further reading of the report. I think the man ought to have at least $30 pension.
The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LYDIA CHAPMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4608) granting a pension to Lydia Chapman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it endeted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of Lydia Chapman, mother of Samuel J. Chapman, late an employee in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Volunteers, and to pay her a dependent pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read. The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4608) to pension Lydia Chapman, submit the following report:

Samuel J. Chapman was the minor son of the claimant. He was steersman on board the transport steamer B. M. Runyon, which was impressed by the Quartermaster's Department. United States Army, for the transportation of troops and stores on the Mississippi River, in July, 1864. The boat was snagged and sunk about 100 miles above Vicksburg, July 21, 1864, and Samuel J. Chapman drowned.

His mother was, at the time of his death, dependent upon him for support. She is a widow now, nearly 90 years of age, and without any property except a life estate in an old house in Upper Acton, Ill., so old and poor that for some years it has not had a tenant. She is dependent upon a feeble unmarried daughter, who supports herself and mother by sewing.

The above facts appear from letters of the Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department and the Quartermaster-General, United States Army; a letter from the deceased, shortly before his death, informing his parents of the shipment by express of money to them; the evidence on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, and by the statements of the sister of the deceased, given to the subcommittee.

The Commissioner of Pensions properly rejected claimant's claim for pension as dependent mother under the law on the ground that there was "no title, claimant's son not having been in the military or naval service of the United States."

Your committee believe that under the circumstances the deceased lost his life in the service of his country. Transports, whether chartered or impressed, were under military orders. They went, and were obliged to go, into the enemy's country. The claimant is needy; she was dependent on this son for support; he lost his life while at important work in the interest of his Government in time of war; she justly is entitled to the bounty of the Government during the brief period of her remaining life.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass with an amendment, by adding to the end of the bill "at $12 per month," and also by inserting before the word "mother," in sixth line, the word "dependent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the co ments proposed by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman who made this report answer this: Are steersmen on board of transport steamers included in the general bill which the House passed?

Mr. WOOD. I do not know. I think not. [Cries of "Vote!"

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA J. HOLMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6378) for the relief of Eliza J. Holman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Eliza J. Holman, widow of William T. Holman, deceased, late a private in Capt. Charles Pettigrew's Company, commanded by Cols. Laban C. Horrell and Albert Forohr, Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

In line 8, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "eight;" so as o read "at the rate of $8 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

J. J. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2742) to grant a pension to J. J. Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of J. J. Davis, late a private in Roberts's Company, Jack Hays's Regiment, in the war between the United States and Mexico, and to allow the said J. J. Davis a pension rated at $12 a month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

In line 7, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "eight;" so as o read, "a pension rated at $8 a month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY W. KEEFFE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary W. Keeffe, widow of Joseph Keeffe, late captain, Fourth Infantry, United States Army, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman. The report (by Mr. Andrews) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S.905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe, having examined the same, adopt as their own the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 139, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

[Senate Report No. 133, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8. 905) granting a pension to Mary W. Keeffe, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is the widow of Joseph Keeffe, late a captain in the United States Army, who died in Boise City, Idaho. December 4, 1891, where his widow now resides. According to the record of the soldier's military career, as furnished by the War Department, he enlisted as a private December 5, 1853, and served as such until October 20, 1862. He was appointed brevet second lieutenant, Second Artillery, October 22, 1862; second lieutenant, Fifth Artillery, July 28, 1866; transferred to Fourth Infantry, May 22, 1875; captain, Fourth Infantry, February 4, 1882; brevet first lieutenant, November 29, 1863; "for sallant and ruary 4, 1882; brevet first lieutenant, November 29, 1863, "for gallant and meritorious services during the defense of Fort Sanders, Tenn., and captain, September 23, 1864, for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Fish-ers Hill, Virginia." He participated actively in nineteen battles during the septements of the war of the rebellion Captain Keeffe served in the various departments of the Army and in different parts of the United States until his death at the time above indicated, being in actual service thirty-eight year. At the time of his death he was without property, excepting his household goods, his pay being only sufficient to meet living expenses. He left a widow with six children, the two oldest having died since the death of their father, and as they contributed largely to the support of their mother and her smaller children, their death has left them in needy circumstances, and the claimant's only income now is a pension of $20 per month, and $2 per month for one of the younger children, which falls far short of being sufficient for a comfortable support and the maintenance of those dependent upon her.

The long, active, efficient, and uninterrupted service of the soldier should, in the opinion of your committee, be taken into consideration, which, together with the narrow circumstances of his widow and the dependent members of her family, entitle her to the relief provided in this bill, and therefore its passage is recommended.

Mr. ERDMAN Mr. Chairman, I move that instead of the

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that instead of the word "thirty" there be inserted the word "twenty-five." She will then receive $5 more than the widow of every other captain in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8" strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "twenty-five."

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty." I see no reason why there should be this change from the grade to which it belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" so as to read "at the rate of $20 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EMILY ELLIOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5855) granting a pension to Emily Elliot.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Emily Elliot, the permanently helpless daughter of Joseph Elliot, late quarter gunner. United States Navy, in the Florida war; late private Company E, First Regiment Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and late private Company B, Second Regiment Maryland Infantry Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman. Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; you do not want the report on that. The report (by Mr. McClellan) was read, as follows:

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; you do not want the report on that. The report (by Mr. McClellan) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5855) granting a pension to Emily Elliott, permanently helpless daughter of Joseph Elliott, late quarter gunner, United States Navy, in the Florida war; private Company E, First Regiment Voltigeurs in the Mexican war, and late private Company B, Second Maryland Cavalry Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, having carefully examined and considered the facts presented, respectfully report as follows:

Joseph Elliott served in the Florida expedition during the years 1841 and 1842, having been taken upon the rolls of the United States receiving ship Pennsylvania August 1, 1842, as quarter gunner, with $98.24 due from Paymaster McLaughlin, of the Florida expedition, and his account was made up to Angust 22, 1842, when he was paid off and discharged.

He was enlisted as Joseph Elliott April 10, 1847, at Baltimore, Md., for the war with Mexico, and was assigned to Company E, Voltigeurs, and was discharged at Fort McHenry, Md., August 31, 1848, by expiration of service, a private.

He was also enrolled June 30, 1863, at Baltimore, Md., as a private in Company B, Second Maryland Cavalry Volunteers, to serve six months, and was mustered out with his company January 28, 1864.

Joseph I. Elliott and Lavenia McCulloh were married in 1845, and two children were the fruits of such marriage, to wit, Harriet and Emily, the latter, the beneficiary of this bill, born January 8, 1848. Her mother died in 1858, and her father, the soldier, in 1868.

Emily Elliott had a fall when a baby, which dislocated her hip, and she has been a deformed and permanently helpless cripple ever since childhood, and has no means of support.

Dr. Israel Jones, in an affidavit dated February 12, 1896, testifies that he is medical superintendent of the Home of Incurables, New York City, N. Y., and das known Emily Elliott for more than nineteen years, and that the is suffer

From the facts presented your committee believe the claim is meritorious, and recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Elliott, the permanently helpless daughter of Joseph Elliott, late quarter gunner, United States Navy, in the Florida war; private Company E, First Regiment Voltigeurs, in the Mexican war, and late private Company B, Second Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension of $12 per month."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the statutes and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anna N. The report (by Mr. Poole) was read, as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5895) granting a pension to Anna N. Kendall, having carefully examined the evidence relating thereto, report:

The beneficiary of this bill was married in August, 1849, to George W. Dow. Two days later Dow left her, having stated just before they were married that he would go and look for a place for them to live and earn a living. Nothing has been heard of him since, so far as can be learned, except that claimant's brother, Robert Gillespie, heard (as he testifies) that Dow was dead. Eight years later, the claimant having heard indirectly that Dow was dead. Eight years later, the claimant having heard indirectly that Dow was dead. Eight years later, the claimant having heard indirectly that Dow was dead, and as the presumption of death after seven years' absence prevailed in Massachusetts, where she lived, she was married to Joshua Kendall, who enlisted August 10, 1861, and served until June 30, 1865, nearly four years, when he was honorably discharged.

He returned home and lived with claimant as her husband until he died, in November, 1871.

Her claim for pension was rejected by the Bureau of Pensions on the ground that she was not shown to be the legal widow of the soldier, as it was not shown that her first husband, Dow, was dead prior to her marriage to the soldier. The widow swears that she heard in 1850, from persons who claimed to have been with Dow, that he had died; she did not marry until seven years after she heard that he was dead. Her brother swears that he heard of Dow's death in 1850. He has never been heard from since. She lived with the soldier (to whom she was married) from 1857 until he died in 1871, and the legality of the marriage seems never to have been called in question until it was done by the Pension Office forty-four years after the disappearance of Dow and twenty-two years after the death of the soldier.

Your committee

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "statutes," in line 5, and inserting "provisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN L. BRITTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1276) granting an increase of pension to John L. Britton. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John L. Britton, late of Company A, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. Sulloway) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8.1276) granting an increase of pension to John L. Britton, having carefully considered the facts in the case, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 128) as their own, and respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 128, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

[Senate Report No. 128, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1276) granting a pension to John L. Britton, have examined the same, and report:

Claimant enlisted August 7, 1861, in Company A. Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and served until May 22, 1862, being discharged for disability. He reenlisted December 15, 1863, in Company F, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability May 27, 1865. He was pensioned for rheumatism from May 23, 1862, at $4 per month, which pension was increased from time to time to $8, $12, and $16, which latter rate he is now drawing. On June 26, 1894, he made application for increase, alleging total disability from rheumatism. He was examined by several medical boards, all of whom found total disability, but his claim was rejected on the ground that the disability was in part due to his advanced age, which, according to the claimant's statement, is 90 years.

Soldier's condition is unquestioned. His rheumatism, for which he was pensioned, has steadily increased, until now he can scarcely hobble around with the aid of two canes. His hip is drawn out of shape, and many of the other joints of the body are deformed by rheumatism.

Your committee is of opinion that the increase asked for is reasonable and just, and therefore report the bill back favorably, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I know this old veteran, and his condition is now worse than it was when that report was made. He now requires the personal attendance of some one all the time, and my only objection to this bill is that the rate of pension is so small. If this were not a Senate bill, I should move to increase the rate. The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is undoubtedly a very meritorious measure, and I dislike to delay the disposition of it by the committee, but I hold in my hand a communication from a number of veterans of the State of Pennsylvania, the purport and contents of which will be gratifying, I am sure, not only to the men who wore the Union blue, but also to the men who wore the gray, and I send it to the desk to be read in my time.

The communication was read, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 9, 1896.

Whereas the people of Cuba have been making a heroic effort in the cause of liberty and independence against the debasing and despotic rule of cause of liberty and independence against the debasing and despotic rule of Spain; and Whereas after years of struggle there has been shown an entire incompetence, even through the most barbarous effort, on the part of Spain to suppress the spirit of freedom that animates the Cuban people; and Whereas the fair Island of Cuba is being desolated and the interests of commerce and trade with the United States and its citizens are suffering loss and destruction, Therefore,

Resolved by Geo. G. Meade Post, No. 1, of Philadelphia, Grand Army of the Republic, That the sympathy of every soldier who wore the "blue" is enlisted in the cause of the Cuban people in their struggle to throw off the yoke of tyranny and oppression; and

Resolved, That these preambles and resolutions be conveyed to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, asking their support of such wise and lawful measures in the Congress of the United States as will bring about the enfranchisement of the Cuban race.

BLUFORD REEDER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2231) for the relief of Bluford Reeder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Bluford Reeder, subject to the limitations and regulations of the pension laws of the United States for pensioning the survivors of the war with Mexico.

An amendment recommended by the committee, adding after "Mexico" the words "and pay him a pension rated at $8 per month," was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALEXANDER M'BRIDE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6282) to increase the pension of Alexander McBride.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Alexander McBride, late a private in Company I, Third United States Infantry, Mexican war, and also a private in Company F, Sixteenth Indiana Infantry Volunteers in the war of the rebellion, at the rate of $72 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, subject to the limitations of the general pension laws.

An amendment recommended by the committee striking out seventy-two" and inserting "thirty" before the word "dollars" was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY T. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6900) increasing the pension of Mary T. Young. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.. That the pension of $12 per month granted to Mary T. Young, widow of James Hamilton Young, late private in Capt. J. R. Swift's company, Pennsylvania Militia, in the war of 1812, be, and is hereby, increased to $20 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTE O. VAN CLEVE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2425) to grant a pension to Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mrs. Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5425). to grant a pension to Charlotte O. Van Cleve, have carefully considered the evidence relating thereto, and report as follows:

Horatio P. Van Cleve, the husband of this claimant, entered the Military Academy at West Point July 1, 1827, and was continuously in the service until September 11, 1836, when he resigned. He was mustered in as colonel of Second Minnesota Volunteer Infantry September 13, 1861, and served continuously until August 24, 1865, when honorably mustered out as brigadiergeneral. He was wounded at Stone River December 31, 1862, and was granted leave of absence on account of wounds January 9, 1863. He was brevetted major-general of volunteers to date from March 13, 1865, for "gallant and meritorious service during the war." He was commissioned second lieutenant of infantry under act of Congress approved June 11, 1890, and was placed on the retired list July 1, 1890, and died April 24, 1891.

The evidence presented to this committee shows that the widow, who is now about 77 years of age, has no income except a pension of $8 per month. She has no property except her homestead, which affords her a home merely, but, aside from that, is of no benefit to her, as it is not salable, and costs about, if not quite, as much for taxes, repairs, etc., as the rent is worth.

In view of the long and valuable services of the soldier and the age and apparent need of the widow your committee recommend that the bill pass with an amendment, striking out the words "one hundred," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Appended are reports from the records of the War Department, giving the full military history of General Van Cleve.

The official records show that Horatio P. Van Cleve was mustered into service as colonel with the field and staff of the Second Minnesota Infantry Volunteers September 13, 1861, to serve three years, with remark "appointed colonel July 23, 1861." He appears to have been present with his regiment until April 22, 1862, when he vacated his commission as colonel Second Minnesota Infantry Volunteers by his acceptance on that date of a commission of brigadiergeneral of volunteers.

He is reported as in command of the Fourteenth Brigade, Fifth Division, Army of the Ohio, from April to October 16, 1862; in command of the Fifth Division (left wing), Fourteenth Army Corps, November to December, 1862; and on December 31, 1862, in command of the Third Division (left wing), Fourteenth Army Corps.

He was wounded at the battle of Stone River (Murfreesboro, Tenn.), December 31, 1862, and was granted leave of absence on account of wounds January 9, 1853. He is reported as in command of the Third Division, Twenty-first Army Corps, from March 13 to October 1, 1863; the United States forces at Murfreesboro, Tenn., from November 23, 1863, to July, 1865, and the First Brigade of the District of Middle Tennessee from July to August 19, 1865, when he was relieved from duty. He was honorably mustered out of service in orders from this Department dated August 24, 1865.

Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, he is considered by this Department as commissioned to the grade of colonel Second Minnesota Volunteers, to date from March 13, 1865, for "gallant and meritorious service during the war."

Respectfully submitted.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, War Department, March 17, 1896.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to substitute for the bill just read Senate bill 1883, which is upon the Calendar at page 62. That bill has passed the Senate, and it grants the same pension that is proposed to be granted by the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitution would require unanimous consent.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.
The bill (S. 1883) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mrs. Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of the late Brig. and Byt. Maj. Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. The House bill (H. R. 5425) was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

JOHN W. POGUE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H.R. 4875) granting a pension to John W. Pogue. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John W. Pogue, late a private in Company E, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $21 per month.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Baker of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4875) granting a pension to John W. Pogue, late private Company E, Tenth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at $24 per month, having examined and considered the facts and circumstances presented, respectfully report as follows:

Soldier served from Angust 30, 1861, to Angust 31, 1894, when mustered out and honorably discharged, there being nothing dishonorable shown in his record. Record shows him to have been "absent sick," but nature of sickness not stated.

He filed claim for pension June 28, 1880, and his claim was allowed from September 1, 1864, at $2 per month for "neuralgia and disease of eyes;" the pension was discontinued November 8, 1881, the Pension Bureau claiming that his disability had ceased.

He filed claim for restoration, which was rejected March 15, 1895, on the ground of no ratable disability from "neuralgia and disease of eyes" since date of dropping from roll. He filed claim under act of June 27, 1890, on December 17, 1852, which was rejected March 15, 1895, on the ground of no ratable disability under said act.

John Mahrburg, a comrade, testifies that claimant was sound at enlistment; complained of pain in his head at Fosterville, and again at Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1863, and also in February, 1894. When he next saw him, in 1875, he was complaining of pain in his head and wore glasses.

Peter Peterson testifies to prior soundness, and that he wore spectacles in 1875, and was seriously affected with neuralgia of head, disease of eyes and heart and stomach, which he claimed were contracted in service. He has constantly grown worse and worse since 1875, during which affiant has seen him frequently, and as far back as six years ago was unable to work or do any manual labor on farm.

Levi W. Armstrong testifies he was corporal, Company E, Tenth Illinois Volunteers, and knew claimant during the war; that he was sound and heart and stomach which he is compelled to wear g abor.

Capt. B. E. A. Simons, late First United States Colored Artillery (Heavy), testifies that claimant has been an invalid for last seven or eight years, suffering from disease of eyes, neuralgia, and heart disease, and at different times in last five years been ill for weeks at a time, and have not considered him able to perform manual labor to any great extent, and from acquaintance for last twenty years believe him entitled to pension.

Dr. Francis M. Hiett testified, January 27,1896, that he has practiced medicine for thirty years, and been the family physician of John W. Pogue for twenty years, during which time has seen him almost every week, and for last four years almost daily. He has suffered with neuralgis of the head and defective vision, and at times with chronic diarrhea and chronic rheumatism of the muscles of the back and shoulders. For the past four years he has suffered with disease of the heart. About one year ago he was confined to his house for about two months with heart disease. He is not able to perform ordinary manual labor one-half of the time.

From the facts presented, your committee believe the claim meritorious, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. JOHN W. BRUNER.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay John W. Bruner, late of Company F, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and Company G, First Regiment Pennsylvania Tolunteers, and Company G, First Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and of the United States Signal Corps, a pension at the rate of $24 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Bruner, late a private in Company F, Second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Captain Higgins's company, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and Company G, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

Amend title of the bill so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John W. Bruner"

The report (by Mr. Andrews) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Andrews) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7240) granting a pension to John W. Bruner, etc., having carefully considered the facts in the case, respectfully report:

The soldier responded to the call for three-months volunteers and enlisted April 18, 1861, in Company F, Second Pennsylvania Infantry. He reenlisted July 31, 1861, in the First Pennsylvania Cavalry for three years, and again reenlisted as a veteran volunteer February 23, 1864, in Company G, First Pennsylvania Cavalry. The soldier was honorably mustered out and discharged August 16, 1865.

October 28, 1890, he filed an application under the act of June 27, 1890, alleging chronic diarrhea and rheumatism. July 15, 1891, the examining board reports him eight-eighteenths for chronic diarrhea and four-eighteenths for sciatica. This claim was rejected February 13, 1894, on the ground of no ratable disability.

July 3, 1894, he again filed application under said act, alleging sciatica, rheumatism, and chronic diarrhea. September 12, 1894, the examining board reports:

"Has chronic muscule-articular rheumatism of legs. * * * Applicant has general senile degeneration to a degree which incapacitates him from active manual labor."

This claim, however, was also rejected on the ground of no ratable dis-

This claim, however, was also rejected on the ground of no ratable disability.

May 13, 1895, the soldier again applied under said act, alleging chronic diarrhea, intermittent fever, and sciatic rheumatism. June 12, 1895, the examining board rates him six-eighteenths for sciatica, two-eightee ths for diarrhea, and three-eighteenths for heart trouble; but the claim was also rejected on the ground of "no ratable disability " " from causes alleged."

Under a liberal interpretation of the law it is very clear that this claimant should have drawn a pension from the date of his first declaration, to say nothing of his subsequent filings, as the examination thereunder shows him to be pensionably disabled. He had three enlistments, without a hiatus of more than four days, covering the entire period of the war; is now 60 years of age and incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, as evidenced by the certificate of the examining board.

Your committee believe that the beneficiary named in the bill is entitled to at least the maximum rate under the act of June 27, 1899, and therefore respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "to" and insert the following: "place upon the pension roll the name of John W. Bruner, late a private in Company F. Second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Captain Higgins's company, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and Company G. First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month."

Your committee further recommend that the title of the bill should be amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John W. Bruner."

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to revoke, disapprove, and set aside so much of General Orders, No. 253, headquarters Department of the Cumberland, Chattanooga, Tenn., dated October 23, A. D. 1853, by command of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, general in command, as confirms so much of Special Field Orders, No. 171, headquarters Department of the Cumberland, Marfreesboro, Tenn., dated June 18, A. D. 1863, Major-General Rosecrans commanding, as dismissed Capt. Elisha B. Bassett, captain of Company B, Nineteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, from the service for cowardice exhibited by deserting his command while engaged with the enemy at the affair of Thompson Station, and to grant and cause to be issued and delivered to the widow of said Elisha B. Bassett a certificate of honorable muster out of the service as of the 23d day of June, A. D. 1863. And the widow and heirs of the said Elisha B. Bassett shall not be entitled by virtue of this act to any pay or allowance subsequent to said 23d day of June, A. D. 1863.

The report (by Mr. Fenton) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. $503) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report as follows:

The said Elisha B. Bassett, now deceased, was, in the year 1863, captain of Company B, Nincteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry. In the early part of March of that year Captain Bassett was in command of his company during the march of his regiment from Brentwood to Franklin, Tenn. On the 5th of that month the enemy were encountered near Thompsons Station, Tenn., and during the engagement that followed Captain Bassett urned over the command of his company to the first lieutenant, Hubbard, and retired to the rear. The colonel of the regiment, H. C. Gilbert, thereupon reported Captain Bassett as gully of cowardice, and recommended his dishonorable dismissal from the service, which recommendation was carried into effect. The purpose of this bill is to so correct the military record of Captain Bassett as to clear his memory from the stain of cowardice, which we think unjustly rests upon it.

reported Captain Bassett as guilty of exwarters, and recommendation was carried into effect. The purpose of this bill is to so correct the military record of Captain Bassett as to clear his memory from the stain of cowardice, which we think unjustly rests upon it.

In support of the bill there were laid before the committee the affidavits of Clark, surgeon, and Bennett, assistant surgeon, of the regiment; Adams, regimental adjutant, and afterwards assistant adjutant-general of brigade; Anderson, first lieutenant of Company H, and afterwards major and colonel of the regiment; Shaffer, first lieutenant Company A, and afterwards colonel and brigadier-general, and Privates Bellinger, Beverly, and Ely, of Captain Bassett's company.

The facts supported by the mass of testimony submitted, and based on personal and professional knowledge, are, in substance, that in the fall of 1862, months prior to the engagement at Thompsons Station, Captain Bassett was attacked with tuberculosis, and was so prostrated that he was ordered on leave to recuperate his health, and went to his home in charge of his wife, who had been sent for to nurse him.

After an absence of about two months he rejoined, and took command of his company, though greatly emaclated, and remained in service thereafter against the advice of the regimental surgeon. From this time until the following spring he spent considerable time in the hospital, leaving it only a few days before the march to Franklin and the engagement hear Thompsons Station. During this march he was obliged to ride in an ambulance, but on meeting the enemy he took personal command of his company, and participated in the engagement until a movement uphili being ordered at a double-quick he found himself too weak to lead his men, and turned over his command to his first lieutenant. This action coming to the notice of the colonel of the regiment, Captain Bassett was reported for cowardice, with the result already stated.

MARION M'KIBBEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 684) granting an increase of pension to Marion McKibben.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Marion McKibben, widow of David B. McKibben, late colonel of the One hundred and fifty-eighth and the Two hundred and fourteenth Regiments, Pennsylvania Infautry, and brevet brigadier-general United States Army, to $50 per month, and pay her a pension hereafter at that rate.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report read.

The following report was made by Senator Palmer;

[Senate Report No. 252, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill granting an increase of pension to Marion McKibben, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of Marion McKibben, widow of the late Major and Brevet Brigadier-General McKibben, from $30 to $50 per month.

Mrs. McKibben is completely broken down in health and unable to do anything for her own support. This condition of her health is believed to have been to a great extent brought on by nursing and caring for her late husband, who was for many years prior to his death a great sufferer from rheumatism contracted during his service in the Army. Her relatives are in no condition to render her assistance, and she is practically without any means of support, except the pension which she is now receiving of $30 per month. General McKibben, while engaged in battle during the month of August, 1863, was captured and taken to Libby Prison, where he contracted scurvy, from the effects of which he never recovered, and which finally resulted in cancer and death. Mrs. McKibben had been previously married to a Mr. Herring, a young man of great promise and who responded to the first call of the Government for troops in 1861, and was killed at the head of his command in one of the early battles of the war.

This appears to be a worthy case and of great merit, and in view of the services of her two husbands and her own sufferings and sacrifices incident to their services and her present helpless condition, the country should not allow her to suffer for means of support.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Hereto appended is the military record of Brevet Brigadier-General McKibben.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move to amend the bill by striking out $50 and inserting $30.

Mr. ERDMAN. I have not waived my demand for the reading of the whole report. I desire that the military record of this soldier shall appear in the Congressional Record.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point of order that the statement of the military record of this soldier as appended to the report is no part of the report. The Chair will notice that the report concludes with the statement "the following report was made by Senator Palmer." Then, after the report of Senator Palmer, there comes some kind of a statement of the military service of this soldier. But that is no part of this report, and I make the point of order that it is not in order to read it. The reading of the report has been finished. If the appended matter embraced anything but the statement of the military record there might be anything but the statement of the military record there might be some reason for calling for the reading of it. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply calls for the reading of this long military record in order to take up time. And it is his own report, too. I make the point of order that it is not in order to read this statement appended to the report.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair will notice that it is not made a part of the report; it is simply appended. This is not in the form in which reports are usually made.

The CHAIRMAN. It is always the custom, as the Chair is informed, to read the entire military record as a part of the report, if it has been see forth by the committee. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

J. C. KELTON, Adjutant-General.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

I make the motion for the reason that this widow is drawing all that she is entitled to under the general law, and this is a bill increasing the pension of this class of claimants. In view of the fact that she is drawing as much as she is entitled to under the general law, if the bill be laid on the table it will simply set the matter aside and allow her to continue to draw the pension she is now receiving.

I move, therefore, that it be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 19, noes 51

Mr. TRACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be amended by striking out "fifty" where it occurs in the bill and inserting "forty;" so that it will read "$40 per month."

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McClellan) there were—ayes 38, noes 35.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been made that no quorum is present, the Chair will count the committee.

THOMAS J. THORP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3945) granting a pension to Thomas J. Thorp, late private Company K. Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Thomas J. Thorp, late a private Company K, Third Regiment Onio Volunteer Cavalry, at the rate of $50 per month, such pension so granted to be in lieu of any pension that may have been heretofore allowed and paid to the said Thomas J. Thorp.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case read. The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. Kerr) was read, as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 3945) granting a pension to Thomas J. Thorp, late private Company K, Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, submit the following report:

The committee has given careful consideration to this bill and recommend its passage with an amendment striking out of the title the following: "Late a private Company K, Third Ohio Volunteer Cavalry."

The soldier is now on the pension rollat $16 per month for "gunshot wound of pelvis and resulting loss of right testicle and naso-pharyngeal catarrh."

In 1868 the soldier's sight began to fail, and this disability continued increasing in severity until he became blind in his left eye in 1875. In 1877 he became blind in the right eye. He has been operated on for cataract by skilled physicians and surgeons, but has secured no relief. He is now totally blind in the left eye and can only distinguish light from darkness with his right eye. What sight remains is of no practical use to him.

Soldier also claimed pension for chronic diarrhea, resulting piles, and prolapsus of rectum, but these claims were denied by the Pension Office.

Upon the question as to whether his blindness was of service origin the soldier took an appeal from the Pension Office to the Secretary of the Interior, and in affirming the Commissioner's decision the Secretary remarks in part as follows:

"Although the impairment of his health from causes connected with the service may have had some agency in producing the conditions from which the cataract originated, it could not be proved that they were mainly due to such condition."

This decision seems to go off upon the theory that, no matter how potential the army disability may have been in producing the particular or resulting disability, unless it mainly produced it the claim should be rejected. It in effect requires the establishment of the controlling fact beyond any doubt; at any rate it excludes the doctrine of probabilities. In the tracing of resulting disabilities or diseases it is simply impossible, in the great majority of cases, to do more than reach the probable cause. In fact, there is nothing more difficult than the investigation into causes of diseases in the class of cases which predominate in the Pension Office.

The probabilities all point to this loss of vision being the result of soldier's army service. He was severely wounded, being shot in the pelvic region, causing a fracture of the pelvic bone. For six years his wound continued open, discharging pus and fragments of bone. As a consequence, he was greatly reduced in strength and vitality, and peculiarly open to resulting diseases. While he was in this condition his sight began to fail, and continued to fail until practically total blindness supervened.

It seems to the committee that the evidence shows, as certainly as it can be required to show in cases of this kind, that the soldier's blindness is due to army service. The passage of the bill, with the amendment proposed, is therefore recommended.

During the reading of the report.

During the reading of the report,
Mr. TALBERT. I move to dispense with the further reading of the report, and let the bill be passed. I think that man ought to have his pension as quick as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion could not be entertained. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has asked that if be read in his own time.

Mr. TALBERT. I only wanted the man to get his money as soon as possible.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report as above.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.
Mr. PICKLER. I move to further amend the bill by striking out all after the word "month," in line 7, and all of lines 8 and 9, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SARAH A. ASPOLD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1505) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah A. Aspold.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the name of Mrs. Sarah A. Aspold, of Annapolis, Md., widow of Edward Aspold, late acting second assistant engineer, United States Navy, and late first assistant engineer in the United States Revenue-Marine Service, deceased, to be placed upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her under certificate No. 7530, under act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report. The report (by Mr. MILES) was read, as follows:

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. Miles) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1805) granting a pension of $25 per month, in lieu of $8 now received, to Sarah A. Aspold, widow of Edward Aspold, late acting second assistant engineer, United States Navy, and first assistant engineer, United States Revenue-Marine Service, having carefully examined and considered all the facts presented, respectfully report as follows:

Edward Aspold was appointed an acting third assistant engineer in the United States Navy December 8, 1882, and served on board the Stepping Stones and Nansemond; promoted to second assistant engineer October 18, 1884; deteched from Nansemond August 9, 1885, and granted leave of absence prior to honorable discharge, and was honorably discharged from the service October 5, 1886, at the time ranking next after (with) masters. He accepted discharge in order to accept the appointment of first assistant engineer in the Revenue-Marine Service, to which appointed September 20, 1885. He was assigned to duty on the Nansemond, stationed at Savannah, Ga. He was detached from the Nansemond April 19, 1889, and placed on waiting orders until October 1 following, when assigned to revenue steamer Moccosin, stationed at Newport, R. I. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RICHARD S. PHILLIPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5670) to increase the pension of Richard S. Phillips.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Richard S. Phillips, late corporal of Company K, Sixty fifty dollars per month, in lieu of the pension he is now second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of receiving.

Mr. PICKLER. There seems to be an error in the printing of the bill. It should read "Sixty-second Illinois Volunteers." I will offer the necessary amendments to correct the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask first for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 70) to increase the pension of Richard S. Phillips, submit the following

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5670) to increase the pension of Richard S. Phillips, submit the following report:

This soldier enlisted as a corporal in Company K. Sixty-second Illinois Volunteers, December 9, 1861, and was honorably discharged March 6, 1863. He seems, according to the record, to have been present at every muster of his company during the long period of his service, and his record and discharge are alike honorable.

It seems in 1863 he had chronic diarrhea, and also had some difficulty in his right side, which resulted in a running sore or abscess for about three months. When it healed he claims that pains and weakness in his back ensued, and have since continued. The scars of the abscess seem to have been apparent at his first medical examination, July 3, 1878. His claim under general law was rejected September 9, 1876, on ground of "no disability from cause alleged."

May 8, 1891, he was pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $12, from July 18, 1890, for rheumatism, disease of digestive organs and heart. His medical examination, February 11, 1891, rates him at six-eighteenths for pains in back and side and six-eighteenths for rheumatism.

He has since been growing worse and more helpless. A. G. Pickett, late assistant surgeon, Fittieth Illinois Volunteers, and who was a member of the medical board which last examined him on January 16, 1896, makes affidavit that he has been paralyzed for about four years. He says "he requires the constant attendance of another person, being perfectly helpless, and in affiant's judgment permanently so." This evidence is fully corroborated by the affidavit of F. M. Beals, another physician of seventeen years' practice. It is somewhat significant, but not, in the opinion of the committee, a controlling fact, that claimant's paralysis is of the right side, the same whereon the abscess was formed, on the healing of which the claim of weakness and pain of back is made by him.

The soldier is shown to be absolutely without

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.
Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out after the words "Company K," in line 5, all of the remainder of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof "Fifty-second Illinois Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the words "Company K," strike out the words "Sixty fifty dollars per month, in lieu of the pension he is now second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of receiving," and insert in lieu thereof "Fifty-second Illinois Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY PELHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4264) granting a pension to Mary Pelham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, subject otherwise to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary Pelham.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Add after the word "Pelham," in line 6, the words "dependent mother of Joseph Farrer, late a private in Company I, Seventh Kansas Cavalry."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands

The report (by Mr. Baker of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Baker of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4264) granting a pension to Mary Pelham, report as follows:

The reports from the records of the War Department show that Joseph Farrer, son of the beneficiary of this bill, served as a private in Company I, Seventh Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, from October 29, 1861, to September 29, 1865, when he was honorably discharged.

Mrs. Pelham's claim under the general law was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that, as she had remarried since the death of the soldier and prior to the date of filing her application, there is no pensionable period. A certified transcript from the family record of the father and mother of the scidier shows that they were married February 4, 1841; that the soldier was born September 29, 1842; that his father died September 8, 1857, and that soldier himself died in May, 1867. He is shown by the evidence before this committee to have been in poor health when he returned from the service to his mother's home, where he remained for about a year, when, as he failed to regain his health, and was desirous to do so and to earn something for his own and his mother's support, and to improve his health, he concluded to try the mountain air and life in Denver, Colo, and engaged to drive a team across the Western plains. After his arrival at Denver, Colo, he remained there until the spring of 1867, when he left to again cross the plains, in company with others, driving team. He was taken worse soon after leaving Denver, and died in his wagon some time in May, 1867, and his fellow-teamsters buried him, and wrote the facts to his mother at the time, and on their arrival told her all the particulars.

Joseph Farrer never was married, and left no widow nor minor children. Mary Pelham, the mother of the soldier, is 75 years of age; is poor and dependent; and while she is unable to show positively that the cause of death originated in the service, it is shown that soldier was in poor health at discharge; that he did not recover his health, and died in about a year and a half after discharge, without medical attendance, and no one who was with him can now be found.

In view of these facts, which are shown in the evidence before the committee, it is believed that the claim is one of merit, and therefore it is recommended that the bill do pass with an amendment, adding, after the word "Pelham," in line 6, the words "dependent mother of Joseph Farrer, late a private in Company I, Seventh Kansas Cavalry."

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN T. BREWSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3884) for the relief of John T. Brewster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of John T. Brewster, late a sergeant in Company K, One hundred and forty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, be placed on the roll of United States pensioners at the increase rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now in receipt of, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report. The report (by Mr. Erdman) was read, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. Erdman) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1884) granting an increase of pension to John T. Brewster, have had the matter under consideration and report:

John T. Brewster was a member of the One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and entered the service August 16, 1862; he remained in the service, taking an active part in the following battles: At the battle of Fredericksburg, under the command of General Burnside, he fought for two days; at the battle of Chancellorsville, under the command of General Hocker, on Sunday, the third day of the fighting, he was shot in the right thigh by a minie ball, which resulted in the breaking of the thigh. After falling in the battle he lay upon the field all that day and night; he was then removed to a log barn, where he lay for seventeen days as a prisoner without any attention being given his wound; from lying upon the log floor he contracted two bedsores, one upon the left thigh and one upon his back; he was then paroled and brought to the hospital in Washington June 15, 1863, but on account of his leg having received no attention the physicians feared to amputate it. He was transferred from the hospital in Washington in September, 1863, to that in Philadelphia, where he remained until June 10, 1865, when he was duly discharged from the hospital, and in his discharge is contained these words: "Disqualified for the Veteran Reserve Corps."

He was originally pensioned for gunshot wound of the right thigh at $8 per month, the highest rate given at that time. The Pension Bureau has caused a number of examinations to be made, and the reason assigned for not granting an increase is that he does not require the aid of a constant attendant. The applicant has caused an eminent physican of this city, Harrison Crook, 918 Fourteenth street NW., to make an examination of his present condition, and he reports under oath as follows:

I. Harrison Cr

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 23d day of March, A. D. 1896, A. S. TAYLOR, Notary Public.

An examination of the papers on file in the Pension Bureau discloses no vicious habits or other reasons operating against the granting of an increase of pension. That his condition is serious is shown by the fact that the War Department allows him $50 every three years for the virtual loss of a leg, and there is no doubt if the wound was so situated that the leg could be amputated the applicant would be better off. It therefore purely becomes a question as to what his present condition is as the result of the gunshot wound. In the Pitty-second Congress a bill to pension the applicant at $50 per month duly passed the committee, and when called up for passage in the House failed to receive unanimous consent for its consideration and did not become a law. The committee are of the opinion that his condition has become more serious, and direct a favorable report to be made, recommending the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out "seventy-two," in line 6 of printed bill, and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty."

The amendment is made because the affidavit of Dr. Crook does not clearly bring the case within the purview of the general laws for disability requiring a constant attendant, but does show that he is entitled to the rate hereby granted.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, in order to get this bill in form, move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the ords which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of John T. Brewster, late sergeant of Company K, One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS POLLOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2176) granting a pension to Thomas Pollock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Pollock, late artisan, ordnance department, Benecia Arsenal, Cal., at the rate of $20 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amend-

Strike out all after the word "California," in line 7, and substitute therefor the words "at such rate as the degree of his alleged disability may entitle him to."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HELEN LARNED.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to a bill which is in rather a peculiar situation, or has rather a peculiar history. A House bill to pension Helen Larned passed the House and Senate and went to the President at the last session; but too short a time before Congress adjourned to receive his approval. A Senate bill for the relief of the same woman passed the Senate, A Senate bill for the relief of the same woman passes came to the House, went to the Invalid Pensions Committee, was came to the House, went to the Invalid Pensions Committee, was reported back favorably, and is now upon the Calendar. The gentleman interested in this bill desires me to ask unanimous consent, in view of the peculiar history of the bill, that the Senate bill may be taken up now and considered by the committee. As the committee will understand, the bill had passed both Houses, but suffered a pocket veto. Ten days did not elapse after it went to the President before the adjournment of Congress. Now the bill has passed the Senate again, and we ask that it be considered in the committee.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I object to that.
Mr. PICKLER. We ask that it be considered.
The CHAIRMAN. What is the number of the bill?
Mr. PICKLER. The number of the bill is S. 1679, Calendar number, 1276

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that this bill be taken up for consideration.

Is there objection?

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BENNETT S. SHAUD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1018) to increase the pension of Bennett S. Shaud.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the invalid pension roll of the United States to name of Bennett S. Shaud, late a private of Company K, Fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in Mexican war, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, subject to the limitations of the general pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the following amend-

In line 7, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM M. DALZELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1498) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to William M. Dalzell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be directed to amend the records of the War Department in the case of William M. Dalzell, late fifth corporal in Company B, Second Regiment Iowa Infantry, so as to give him an honorable discharge dating to the end of the war.

Mr. McCLELLAN Let us have the report Mr. Chairman

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that this is a long report, and can not be read before half past 10.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Then I ask unanimous consent to lay this bill aside without prejudice. The gentleman who made the report is not here to take care of it, and there has always been objection to the passage of these bills removing the charge of describing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, retaining its place on the Calendar, without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SAMUEL M'KINSEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4620) granting a pension to Samuel McKinsey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel McKinsey, of Columbus, Kans., late private in Company B, Seventeenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month, said pension to be in lieu of pension now being received by said McKinsey under certificate No. 119196.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible to read it within the time remaining.

Mr. ERDMAN. I think we had better have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a long report. It can not be read between this and the time of adjournment.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request. This is a very meritorious case. I can assure him the man needs constant attendance every hour of the day and night.

Mr. ERDMAN. Let the report be printed in the RECORD, and then stop.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania as unanimous consent that the report be printed in the Record. there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report (by Mr. Kirkpatrick) is as follows: The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) is as follows:

[To accompany H. R. 4620.]

R. 4620) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Samuel McKinsey," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass, with an amendment striking out the word "thirty," in line 8, and inserting the word "seventy-two" in lieu thereof.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. PEFFER. I introduce a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a national monetary commission, and ask that it be read at the desk, printed, and lie on the table. I desire to give notice that upon the first day when the Senate is in session after the 1st of January next, immediately after the morning business is concluded, I shall ask the Senate to indulge me while I submit some remarks upon the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. 169) providing for the appointment of a national monetary commission was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas during the campaign immediately preceding the late Presidential election the monetary system of the country was the leading issue discussed before the people; and

Whereas the contending parties in that campaign proposed four distinct and different policies, namely: (1) National gold monometallism; (2) international gold and silver bimetallism at a ratio agreed upon by the nations; (3) national silver and gold bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1, with Government paper money redeemable in coin; (4) national silver and gold bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1, supplemented by Government full legal-tender paper money; and tional gold and silver bimetallism at a ratio agreed upon by the nations; (3) national silver and gold bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1, with Government paper money redeemable in coin; (4) national silver and gold bimetallism at the ratio of 16 to 1, supplemented by Government full legal-tender paper money; and

Whereas the result of the election does not show that a majority of the voters favor any of said policies; and

Whereas it is agreed on all sides that a permanent adjustment of these differences is of supreme importance: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint four commissioners, one from the National Democrat party, one from the Republican party, one from the Democrat party, and one from the Republican party, one from the Democrat party, and one from the Populist or People's Party. These four shall choose a fifth, and together they shall constitute a national monetary commission, whose duty it shall be to examine and study the general subject of finance in its practical relations to the business affairs of the people of the United States. In such examination the commission shall invite suggestions, arguments, and plans by individuals, persons, and by agents and representatives of organized bodies, and shall make diligent inquiry among farmers, wage earners, merchants, manufacturers, bankers, carriers, and other business men to learn their views with respect to defects in our existing financial methods and the proper remedies therefor, and to ascertain what material points they are agreed upon and on what they disagree. The commission shall consider all matters presented to them or brought to their attention and which are relevant to the inquiry with which they are charged; they shall preserve all arguments, papers, and documents submitted to them, and report the same to Congress with their conclusions thereon, by bill or otherwise, with a view of establishing a permanent monetary system for the United States gress.

For the purpose of defraying the expenses of the commission herein provided for, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This joint resolution shall take effect and be in force on the day next following the day of its approval.

Resolved, That the killing of Gen. Antonio Maceo, a renowned general in the service of the Republic of Cuba, if true, while under a flag of truce and with an assurance of safety from the Spanish captain-general, was a violation of the rules of civilized war, an act of base treachery, a murder cowardly and disgraceful, which demands the execration of every Government and of all the peoples of the world, whether civilized or savage; that the Government which authorizes, permits, or falls to punish the assassins who are connected in any way with the guilt of this crime with the extreme penalty of the law is an outcast from the family of nations and from the pale of civilization and public law; that the Committee on Foreign Relations e, and is hereby, directed to make inquiry as to the facts and report to the Senate at an early day.

And also a statement of the several amounts of the claims lodged in the Department of State by citizens of the United States against Spain growing out of the alleged insurrection now existing in the Island of Cuba.

And also all correspondence with the Spanish Government relating to the vessel called the Competitor and the persons captured with or near that vessel, with a statement of the charges pending in any court in Spain or Cuba against said persons and the proceedings of such court in those cases, and the place of their imprisonment, the character of their treatment while in prison, and the condition of their health. COLUMBIA RIVER SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries:

Whereas the Columbia River is the only stream in the world where the Chinook salmon is found in all its perfection, no other known river producing salmon of such firm, rose-red, oily flesh; and

Whereas the artificial propagation of the Chinook salmon in the tributaries of the Columbia River has long since passed the experimental stage, the salmon packers of the Columbia River, from funds furnished by themselves, having demonstrated the practicability of keeping the annual run of the Chinook in the river up to the maximum; and

Whereas the State of Oregon and the United States Government are now only propagating a sufficient number of young Chinook to prevent a diminution of the annual run, when in point of fact the output of young salmon from the hatcheries ought to be brought up to an average of 100,000,000 a year; and

tion of the annual run, when in point of fact the output of young salmon from the hatcheries ought to be brought up to an average of 100,000,000 a year; and

Whereas the salmon-packing industry is the largest manufacturing industry, with one exception, in the Northwest, its wage roll being $2,000,000 a year; the industry using the product of the factories of every section of the United States; it being a large exporter of its finished product and an importer only of such materials as are a source of much revenue to the General Government; and

Whereas, as the Chinook salmon has become well known and much sought as a food fish, both throughout the United States and the world over, it is greatly desired that said fish be furnished to the people as cheaply as possible, in order that it may be an article of food for the masses rather than a luxury for the few; and

Whereas the United States Fish Commission has recognized the importance of the royal Chinook salmon of the Columbia River as an article of food for the people of the whole country, and is making zealous efforts to protect said fish, and to that end requires but a comparatively small appropriation for the construction and maintenance of hatcheries and necessary spawning grounds in accordance with plans already formulated to completely and fully stock the rivers: Therefore,

Bett resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to set apart the Clackamas River, in the State of Oregon, one of the tributaries of the Columbia River, and thec ontiguous Government lands to such an extent and in such quantities as by him may be deemed advisable, as natural spawning grounds for said fish and for the use of salmon hatcheries.

PROTECTION OF DRAMATIC COPYRIGHTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2306) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, on page 2, line 18, after the word "granted," to insert "upon hearing, after notice to the defendant."

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.
Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the amendment?
Mr. PLATT. The effect of the amendment is that an injunction shall not be granted in the matter referred to without notice to the defendant. I think it is a proper amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

OBLIGATIONS OF LEGAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to call up and have laid before the Senate a resolution introduced by me on Wednesday last

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Nebraska. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved. That it is the settled doctrine in the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to impair the obligations of legal contracts, either by direct legislation or by legislation that withdraws all substantial remedies from their enforcement.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the success of the Populist party at the late election in many States, and notably in Kansas and Nebraska, has provoked much discussion in the Eastern press and among Eastern statesmen respecting the policies that will be pursued during the years of Populistic administration. Many prophecies of hostile legislation and adverse administrations have been made. It has been frequently predicted, if not positively asserted, that the legislation of those States this winter will be such as to retard, if not prohibit, the enforcement of legal contracts, and by that means impair their obligations. It has also been stated that the Populist party is hostile to the enforcement of legal obligations, and has no conception of their sacredness. and has no conception of their sacredness.

I will pass over the dense ignorance irresistibly implied in asser-I will pass over the dense ignorance irresisting implied in assertions of this character for the purpose of saying that so far as Nebraska is concerned, while her legislature will be under the control of the Populist party and her administration will shortly pass into the hands of its representatives, there is not the slightest ground to fear that anything will be done that will in any respect violate legal obligations or place a barrier across the pathway of their prompt and effectual enforcement.

The Populist party of Nebraska is composed of men who understand quite well the inviolability of all contracts as well as the sacredness of public and private property and the rights of citizens. The party was not born to destroy, but to build up and make more secure the rights of all, and to give to all that full measure of justice their position as members of society entitles

I wish to utterly repudiate assertions of an intended menace of the rights of property or contracts by the legislature and incoming administration of Nebraska. Two years ago we elected the pres-ent honored chief executive of our State by a bare plurality of 3,100. It was asserted then that his election would impair the credit of the State, but the argument was not heeded. Instead of impairing its credit, his election seems to have strengthened it, for he was reelected in November last by a majority of nearly 22,000. The other gentlemen chosen for the subordinate State offices are competent business men of experience and high character; they are patriotic citizens, believers in law and order, and will discharge their respective duties conservatively, conscientiously, and to the best interests of all. Those who live elsewhere and have, or may have, obligations against the State, or any of its subdivisions, or citizens, will not be deprived of entering our courts and enforcing them as fully and completely as they can in the courts of their own State. They will find no prejudice against them or their cause if meritorious. Our judges will compare very favorably with those of the oldest States of the Union in point of ability, integrity, and a knowledge of the duties of their offices. They will hold the scales of justice impartially between residents and nonresidents; they will enforce all legal obligations in their letter and spirit, and defeat those in violation of law; they are, in every conceivable respect, abreast of the times and fully armed and equipped, by character and education, to impartially discharge their duties without fear or favor.

Mr. President, I personally know many members of the incomoffices are competent business men of experience and high charcharge their duties without fear or favor.

Mr. President, I personally know many members of the incoming legislature, and all by reputation. They, too, are gentlemen of high character and ability. The majority are Populists and silver Democrats, but they are none the worse for that. They are loyal sons of Nebraska and of the Union. They will be guilty of nothing rash, nothing that will impair the standing of the State, nothing that will destroy its credit or detract from its glory, but they will, on the contrary, build up and make better and more secure, and inspire confidence in all.

Eastern holders of stocks in our railway corporations sometimes express fear of hostile legislation, and I desire to say to them that such a feeling is groundless. While I do not doubt that the legislature will enact measures looking to the prevention of overcapitalization, wild and reckless management, and will take strong fature will enact measures looking to the prevention of overcapitalization, wild and reckless management, and will take strong grounds against railways interfering in political matters and favoring one political party by the free service of their trains to the rigid exclusion of others from a like privilege, yet so far as equitable and just passenger and freight rates are concerned there will be nothing done of which any fair-minded man may justly complain.

complain.

There is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States a case from Nebraska involving the constitutionality of a maximum freight rate act passed by our legislature several years ago. The case may or may not be decided before the present legislature, under the constitution, will be required to adjourn; but I am safe in saying that, whatever the decision may be, there will be nothing done by the legislature that will savor of malice, hostility, or injustice, or of which the railways or their stockholders can in the slightest degree rightfully complain. The bill-may be reintroduced and carried along to a point where the legismay be reintroduced and carried along to a point where the legis-lature can amend it should the decision of the court impair it, but the new act will not be radical or impair the substantial rights of any.

Nebraska has many industries of very great importance. extensive beet-sugar factories have been erected in the State, one being located in the county in which I have the honor to reside. More than a million dollars have been put into these plants and the legislature has been invoked from time to time to render assistance to the enterprise and enable it to determine by experiment whether the soil of Nebraska is capable of profitably growing

Two years ago a Republican legislature enacted a law granting to the owners of these factories, and to those that might be erected, five-eighths of a cent per pound bounty on all sugar produced in the State, on condition that the proprietors would pay to the producers of the beets $5 per ton. It did not, however, make a specific appropriation to carry out the act, which, under our constitution, must be done before public moneys can be expended.

pended.

It has been frequently and persistently predicted that this enterprise would be raided and destroyed by the incoming legislature. I must say that I do not approve of all gentlemen owning these factories have done in promoting their interests, but I have no fear that they will be injuriously affected by unjust legislation. While it is a debatable question whether Nebraska should engage in a permanent policy of bounty giving, yet so widespread is the belief that our soil is capable of producing almost unlimited quantities of sugar beets that can be profitably manufactured into sugar, that aid will not be withheld until an effectual trial has been made and the question fairly and effectually detertrial has been made and the question fairly and effectually deter-mined. The benefits of the act of which I speak inure largely mined. The benefits of the act of which I speak fluire largely to the producers of beets, and as a result there was paid last year, and will be paid this year, $60,000 to beet producers that would not have otherwise been paid them.

What I have said respecting beet sugar may also be said respecting chicory. A bounty has been granted upon chicory, and chicory mills are in operation in Nebraska, and the industry promises to be more from the control of th

The Populists of Nebraska understand quite as well as the people of any other section of the Union that it is highly important and profitable to the State to diversify our industries as far as can be done without too heavy a tax on the people. I am a believer be done without too heavy a tax on the people. I am a believer in this doctrine myself.

The law to which I refer will not expire by its terms for one year more, and I think the legislature will make an appropriation to carry out its provisions, a thing that their Republican predecessors should have done, however ill advised its passage in the first instance may have been. The owners of these factories have complied with the law, and an observance of good faith requires that they should receive the promised bounty. I think the legislature will inaugurate a policy that will encourage new industries, thus taking a portion of our people from the farm and placing them in other pursuits, where they will no longer be competitors as producers of farm products, but become producers of other useful things, while they remain consumers of the products of the farm. I am not arguing in favor of a high protective tariff; I am only arguing in favor of that indisputable power and right inherent in every State to pursue an industrial policy that will, in the judgment of its legislature, result in the greatest good to the greatest number. number.

The gentlemen who are engaged in the beet-sugar industry are not members of the American Sugar Trust, as has been frequently asserted; that fact was fully disclosed in the investigation that asserted; that fact was fully disclosed in the investigation that was held by a special Senate committee, appointed in 1894, of which I had the honor to be a member. They are free from any entangling alliance with that gigantic institution; they are engaged in developing an industry new in this country, and which I do not doubt will eventually prove profitable, not only to them and their associates, but to the people of the Western States, and for that matter to the entire Union.

Mr. President, these facts are known and understood by the legislature of Nebraska, as they are known and understood by me and other citizens. The Populist legislature—and I speak for Nebraska only—can be relied on to act conservatively, wisely, and justly in all respects, and to give to every man, woman, and child beneath the sun, whether a citizen of the State, or far-off Russia, for that matter, a full measure of equal and each incitizen.

for that matter, a full measure of equal and exact justice.

I deny with all the strength I possess the slightest imputation against the incoming administration of Nebraska. No more loyal, intelligent, capable business men can be found in any State in the Union than those who will compose it for the next two years, and if any Eastern man or newspaper is still solicitous respecting the course that will be pursued I can say to them that the time has come when in justification of their own intelligence they should cease false assertions against the State and against those who are to discharge its official duties.

to discharge its official duties.

The Populist party of Nebraska will engage in overhauling the State offices and State institutions that for twenty-nine years have been under unbroken Republican rule. They will enact an election law that will be just to all, but which can not be tortured by construction in the interest of one political party and against the interest of another; one that will secure to every citizen an honest and free ballot; they will engage in legislation that will affect the general policy of the State; in amending vicious legislation passed by their predecessors, and in affording the people protection in many respects which has been denied them for years. The name of Nebraska will never be justly chargeable with repudiation in any form.

From the Omaha World-Herald of November 25 I read the following press dispatch:

BOSTON, MASS., November 24. The jubilee banquet and celebration of the Home Market Club, in honor of the election of William McKinley, was held at Mechanics' Hall this evening. Senator Hoan, of Massachusetts, was among those who addressed the meeting. He said in part:

"It is certainly a sad thing to think that States like Kansas and Nebraska, children of New England, that have great farming populations where we expect to find—if we find anywhere—sobriety, integrity, steadiness, conservatism, the great communities where churches abound and where the schools are the best in the world, should have lent themselves to this crazy attempt at revolution and this passionate crusade of dishonor."

There are some respects in which these remarks of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] need correction. Ne-braska is not a child of New England, however desirable that might be. The population of Nebraska is heterogeneous; our peo-ple come from every State and Territory in the Union. Many of them formerly resided in Bohemia, the German States, England, them formerly resided in Bohemia, the German States, England, Scotland, and Ireland, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Italy, and, in fact, many came from different parts of the habitable globe. Many, it is true, came from New England, and, be it said to their lasting honor, they are true Nebraskans, and while they love New England as a child loves its parents, they are not blind to her faults nor her virtues. The population of Nebraska is rapidly becoming homogeneous, and all, regardless of birthplace, are deeply attached to the State and to its welfare and are keenly sensible of the necessity of her bearing a good name. They are, therefore, jealous of any imputation against it, and the senior Senator from Massachusetts was somewhat unguarded, to say the least, in saying, as he is reported to have said, that Nebraska engaged in a "crazy attempt at revolution and a passionate crusade of dishonor."

he is reported to have said, that Nebraska engaged in a "crazy attempt at revolution and a passionate crusade of dishonor."

Mr. President, Nebraska is a land of churches and schools, and they are among the best in the world. The Senator from Massachusetts does not find fault with our local institutions; he only grumbles, whines, and scolds because, in the exercise of an undoubted right of freemen, the electors of Nebraska saw fit, by a clear majority, to elevate to power members of the Populist party. He speaks of it as "this crazy attempt at revolution and passionate crusade of dishonor." Mr. President, Nebraska has never engaged in a revolution that was not pacific and lofty in its character and directly within the true province of a Christian government.

Massachusetts possesses nothing in Nebraska that should entitle her foremost man to speak of our people as the senior Senator her foremost man to speak of our people as the senior Senator from that State has done. While we accord to Massachusetts her rights, and look upon her as an older and therefore a more compact and better-organized community than ours, we do not look to her for advice on a political, social, scientific, religious, or any Nebraska can not justly have laid at her door the charge that Nebraska can not justly have laid at her door the charge that her citizens called or were represented in a convention that had for its chief purpose a treasonable plot to dissolve the Union. In the only great crisis in the history of our country, when Nebraska was a Territory, she gave as large a percentage of her population to the cause of the Union as any other State, and her soldiers were as valorous and chivalric as any that ever marched upon the field of battle. She has not engaged in a crusade of dishonor, and I regret that the venerable Senator from Massachusetts should permit himself to be led into such extravagant expressions.

I do not speak of this misrepresentation as strongly as I feel, but I must be permitted to say that it was an unwarranted, gratuitous, open, and flagrant insult to an honest, intelligent, poor, tous, open, and flagrant insult to an honest, intelligent, poor, but struggling Christian people. Sir, the percentage of illiteracy in Nebraska is smaller than in Massachusetts. Her churches in Nebraska is smaller than in Massachusetts. Her churches and schools, according to her population, are fully as numerous and as well equipped to impart Christian and secular education as are those of Massachusetts. Our charitable institutions are among the finest of the world; our people are industrious, economical, honest, intelligent, persevering, and loyal.

It can not be truthfully said of Nebraska that she joined in a crazy and dishonorable crusade to enforce the provisions of a brutal fugitive-slave law. Her people have never been guilty of mobbing one of their own citizens for no greater offense than raising his voice against oppression and wrong. The stillness of her atmosphere has not been broken by the appeals for assistance of cringing men and defenseless women and children, guilty of no offense but fleeing to her soil for freedom, only to be captured and placed in chains by her citizens and returned to servitude for a reward. Whatever may be said of Nebraska, she has not been guilty of any of these crimes against the laws of God and civilization. She has never dishonored her foremost citizen, when living, for extolling the cause of liberty, and placed wreaths on living, for extolling the cause of liberty, and placed wreaths on his grave, when dead, because he had been the friend of liberty. She has done none of these, and no dishonor of this kind attaches to her name or imperils her glory.

What was the "crazy attempt at revolution and passionate cruşade of dishonor" of which the Senator from Massachusetts spoke. Nothing, sir, more than that a majority of the people of Nebraska, believing that silver is money of the Constitution, and that it should be coined at the ratio of 16 to 1, upon terms of equality with gold, saw fit to cast their ballots in November last for the elevation of one of her foremost citizens and the most brilliant orator of the age to the Presidency. Was there anything revolutionary in that? Was there anything dishonorable in it? Was it a "crusade of dishonor?" Sir, for eighty-one years of our national existence silver had been thus coined, and until it was demonetized in 1873 by a "crazy attempt at revolution and a passionate crusade of dishonor," in which some of the representapassionate crusade of dishonor," in which some of the representative men of Massachusetts participated, and by which they sought to confiscate one-half the property of the debtor classes of the nation. If there can be more dishonor in public affairs, or in government, than the confiscation of the property of its citizens, directly or indirectly, I do not know where or in what direction it can be found. If Massachusetts possesses a monopoly of useful knowledge of the financial question, or any other, for that matter I have yet to learn the fact.

Mr. President, it is possible that a man can be born under an matter I have yet to learn the fact.

Mr. President, it is possible that a man can be born under another sun and in another clime than that of Massachusetts and possess a modicum of intelligence and patriotism and learn the sharp line of demarcation between "revolution and a passionate crusade of dishonor" on the one hand, and lofty patriotism and a high sense of public and private duty on the other. I say, sir, it is possible, because I well understand that there are those who have been born and live in Massachusetts who have conceived a most bitter hatred for the West and everything Western, and who believe that neither good nor intelligence can be found in that section of the country. The patriotism of the people of Nebraska is as broad and limitless as her plains; their Christianity and sense of duty are as pure and untainted as her atmosphere. Neoraska is as broad and limitless as her plains; their Christianity and sense of duty are as pure and untainted as her atmosphere. Never thus far in the history of the State has she been guilty of dishonor, and never as long as intelligence is predominant and God reigns in the hearts of her people will she be guilty of anything that will place a stain upon her good name or that will cause her to be spoken of by honest, intelligent, and fair-minded men in a disparation recovery. men in a disparaging manner.

I shall not now speak at length respecting this matter, as I will at another time. I have only embraced the first opportunity presented to declare that Nebraska, though under the domination of the Populist party, will be true to her teachings and will be an honor to herself and the Union of which she is and will continue

Mr. President, it is an error to always look upon the accusing source as pure. Many times the accuser is more guilty than the accused. Shakespeare, who has given the world more useful knowledge than any other single individual, in my judgment, very aptly put the truth in this language:

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try.

I may be permitted to add that it is not improbable that among those who accuse Nebraska and Kansas there may be found a few those who accuse Nebraska and Kansas there may be found a few more guilty than those they try.

Mr. President, I assume that the doctrine of the resolution is so well understood by the people of this country, and especially by Populists, who are always abreast of the times and familiar with the latest and best thought on political and legal questions, that it will not be necessary for me to discuss it at length.

Section 10, Article I, of the Constitution declares, among other things, that no State shall pass any "law impairing the obligations of contracts." The States when they entered the Union surrendered this power. Of course no enlightened government would attempt the enactment of such a law, notwithstanding there might be no constitutional prohibition. Contracts are sacred; their obligation must not be impaired, and no one understands their obligation must not be impaired, and no one understands this more fully or more completely than the people of the West, nor have they the slightest desire to do so. It is the ambition of our people to get out of debt, to pay their honest obligations as rapidly as they mature in the utmost good faith and to the utmost farthing, and to enjoy an era of prosperity. They invite and will welcome new enterprises and new capital, and such enterprises and capital will be safe under the laws to be passed by the incoming legislature.

legislature.
I can not understand the motives that prompt accusations against the integrity of Nebraska and Kansas, or any other State, for that matter, that may have seen fit to elect Populist State officers. Sir, matter, that may have seen fit to elect Populist State officers. Sir, we are American citizens. We understand the duties and obligations imposed upon us as citizens, and we understand our rights as well. It is the desire of all having a habitation on the soil of Nebraska to make the State one of the brightest and best of the Union. May it not be possible that in the future history of our glorious country, when the greater republic is to be built, resting on the foundations of the present, Nebraska, with her teeming millions of intelligent people and her boundless natural and acquired resources, will be called on to take her full share of responsibility, as I trust she will be awarded her full measure of praise? And when that time comes we will shrink from no responsibility or when that time comes we will shrink from no responsibility or duty in contributing our full measure to the glorious result

Mr. President, Nebraska will successfully weather every gale that may be set her pathway. Her sturdy sons and fair daughters will not become discouraged and give way under imputations like those I have noticed. The battle for better conditions will be renewed and waged to its utmost to make her one of the foremost, as she is now one of the most important, States of the Union, and it will be done under the administration of the Populist party, for the world should know that that party has come into power to administer the affairs of the State for numberless years to come. The Populists understand well that their legislation must be of a character that will meet the approval and judgment of all to enable it to continue in power. They understand well that whatever they may do this winter will be swept aside by a Republican administration unless it be of a character to meet with popular approval and to continue the party in power.

I have no utterances of complaint against any other section of the country. I am not prepared to charge any with disloyalty or with engaging in a "passionate crusade of dishonor" because they may not entertain my political opinions. I am willing to accord to every man and every commanity the right to think and act as they may see proper, so long as they do not trespass upon the like right of others, and I will not fail to do them justice here or elsewhere. I demand a like right for Nebraska. I trust the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. HOAR and Mr. GALLINGER. What is the resolution, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the settled doctrine in the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to impair the obligations of legal contracts, either by direct legislation or by legislation that withdraws all substantial remedies from their enforcement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senate may be full when action is had.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution seems to be reenacting the Constitution of the United States. My attention was called away from the Senator's speech, and there may be something in the resolution that is not apparent.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the pending question upon which the roll is to be called?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A resolution has been submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Allen], and the Chair will state that the absence of a quorum having been suggested, he has ordered a call of the roll of the Senate in order to ascertain whether a quorum is present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HOAR. I owe an apology to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] for not having heard his address to the Senate, and I will make whatever confession of guilt should be made. My attention was called away by some person who wished to speak to me on important public business, and I was unable to listen to the Senator's remarks.

the Senator's remarks.

This resolution, if I understand it, seems to be a reenactment of the clause of the Constitution of the United States with the addition, which I suppose is entirely sound in principle, that no State has the right to interfere with the obligation of contracts by refusing proper remedies. But what particular thing the Senator has in mind which he wishes to meet by a reaffirmation of that important principle now, I should like to be informed.

I say again, it is rather trespassing upon the Senator's good nature when he has already done so; but if he will please state as briefly as he chooses the particular grievance or trouble he now has in mind, I should be glad to hear him.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be glad to state, for the information of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, the particular grievance. The senior Senator from Massachusetts said, on the 23d of November, at a meeting of the Home Market Club, at Mechanics' Hall.

ber, at a meeting of the Home Market Club, at Mechanics' Hall,

It is certainly a sad thing to think that States like Kansas and Nebraska, children of New England, that have great farming populations, where we expect to find, if we find anywhere, sobriety, integrity, steadiness, conservatism, the great communities where churches abound and where the schools are the best in the world, should have lent themselves to this crazy attempt at revolution and this passionate crusade of dishonor.

He referred, as I understand, to the action of those States in the election of Bryan electors and Populist State tickets.

The Eastern press for a month or more has been full of insinuations and charges that it was the purpose of the Populist party in Kansas and Nebraska to ignore legal obligations, rights of property, rights of citizens, and to withdraw, if they could not do it in any other way, all substantial remedies for the enforcement of contracts. I have taken occasion in the remarks which I have just submitted, and to which I very much regret the Senator did not listen, to repudiate any assertions of that kind so far as the State of Nebraska is concerned. I undertook in those remarks to show that no class of people in the United States understand the sacredness of contracts and their obligations better than the Pop-

The people who are making these assertions against the State of Nebraska are doing themselves incalculable injury, and it is for the purpose of putting at rest in authoritative form, if that can be done, these accusations and to announce the known and declared purpose and policy of the Populist party in Kansas and Nebraska, purpose and poncy of the Populist party in Kansas and Nebraska, and elsewhere, for that matter, to observe the traditions and language of our Constitution in their legislation, and to do nothing which any fair-minded and honest man can truthfully say savors of repudiation or hostility, that I desire to have this resolution, coming from the Populist party or its representation in this Chamber, passed. Of course, it is merely declaratory of constitutional destrine.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to make a reaffirmation of the doctrine of common honesty and thinks the resolution is necessary for that purpose, for the reasons he has stated, I of course will not interfere with it.

Mr. ALLEN. So great in this country are the word and the opinion of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, so far-reaching, either for good or evil, are his utterances, that I believe it would be the safer and wiser policy to adopt the resolution. If this language had been used by almost any other Senator in this Chamber than the senior Senator from Massachusetts I do not think there would have been any occasion for the resolution.

Mr. HILL. I suggest to my friend the Senator from Nebraska the propriety of amending the resolution, in the third line thereof, by striking out all after the word "either" and inserting the words "directly or indirectly;" so that it will read as follows:

Resolved That it is the settled doctrine in the United States of America.

Resolved, That it is the settled doctrine in the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to impair the obligations of legal contracts, either directly or indirectly.

contracts, either directly or indirectly.

I suggest that language instead of the phrase "by direct legislation or by legislation that withdraws all substantial remedies from their enforcement."

Mr. ALLEN. Those are the only two ways that a legislature could violate the constitutional provision. I have no objection to the amendment, however. I accept it.

Mr. HILL. The amendment, then, is agreed to, I understand? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be considered as being agreed to.

ered as being agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to know how the resolution will read as it has been amended, and then perhaps I should like to make a single remark

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read as

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the settled dootrine in the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to impair the obligations of legal contracts, either directly or indirectly.

contracts, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Platt and Mr. Aldrich addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. Platt. Mr. President, it seems to me a very strange condition to which we have come that it should be supposed to be necessary for the Senate to pass a Senate resolution affirming any part of the Constitution of the United States. If we are going to do it, I think we had better do it in the language of the Constitution and not adopt any new language about it, or attempt to put and not adopt any new language about it, or attempt to put any Senatorial construction upon the language of the Constitu-tion of the United States. The function of construing the Con-stitution of the United States and determining the effect of its clauses rests with the Supreme Court and not with the Senate of the United States.

I am very much inclined to think I would vote against the resolution, or any resolution proposing that the Senate shall reaffirm the Constitution of the United States, either as a doctrine or as the Constitution itself. If I may be permitted to use a somewhat homely but direct phrase, I desire to express the opinion that this

Mr. ALDRICH. I rose for the purpose of making the same suggestion that has just been made by the Senator from Connecticut, and as the Senator from Nebraska has accepted the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York, I desire to ask him if he will be willing to accept a further amendment, so that the resolution, if further amended, will read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the settled doctrine of the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts.

That puts it in the plain language of the Constitution; and if it is necessary to reaffirm the Constitution, it uses the language employed in that instrument itself.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the resolution as it stands now is precisely that.

cisely that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not. It contains the words "either directly or indirectly."

Mr. ALLEN. But that has all been withdrawn. I call for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from New York to make that suggestion.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; I call for the reading of the resolution as amended at the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as amended will be read.

read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the settled doctrine in the United States of America that no State possesses constitutional power to impair the obligations of legal contract, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing that the words "either directly or indirectly" shall be stricken out, if that will suit the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. My suggestion is to use the precise language employed in the Constitution itself, in order that there shall be no doubt about what we intend.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution as it is now before the Senate uses that language.

Mr. ALDRICH. No, the language of the Constitution is that no State shall * * * pass any * * * law impairing the "no State shall law impairing the pass any obligation of contracts."

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, that is the language used here.
Mr. ALDRICH. No, it is not the precise language. I suggest that if we are going to reaffirm the Constitution we should use the precise language.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is a distinction between the language used by the Senator from Rhode Island and the language used by me in the resolution I fail to discover it. However, I am not par-me in the resolution I fail to discover it. However, I am not particular about it. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Rhode Island should have all the glory that will come to him in consequence of this substitute, and I will accept it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose the chief purpose of the Senator from Rhode Island is to rob the Populist party of the authorship of the resolution, but I am perfectly willing that he should do so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very curious to know from the Senator from Nebraska the purpose of the resolution. For my part I can not imagine, to save my life, as was suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Platt], why he should solemnly introduce a resolution into the Senato of the United States affirming a specific clause in the Constitution of the United States; and ing a specific clause in the Constitution of the United States; and I can not understand the purpose of the Senator. I should like to hear why he thinks it advisable that the Senate of the United States should select out a certain clause in the Constitution of the United States and declare by solemn resolution that that is the settled doctrine of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Oregon certainly could not have been in the Chamber when I delivered my remarks upon the reso-

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was not. I did not know that the Senator had spoken to the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. I have spoken at some length upon the subject. Mr. ALLEN. I have spoken at some length upon the subject. It has been charged, as I said in my previous remarks, by Eastern statesmen and the Eastern press that the elevation of the Populist party to power in Kansas and Nebraska was a passionate crusade of dishonor. It has been claimed and is being claimed to-day in certain sections of the Union that it is the purpose of the incoming legislatures of the States of Kansas and Nebraska to pass laws in the late the enforcement of legal obligations.

inimical to the enforcement of legal obligations.

Unfortunately for this country, there are some people ignorant enough to believe that that is true. Now, for the purpose of enlightening them so far as that can be done, and for the purpose of convincing the business people of this country that the elevaof convincing the Dishness people of this control has the interest tion of the Populist party, instead of being inimical to their interest, is really in favor of their true interest, as well as the interest of the masses, it was thought proper that this resolution should come from a Populistic source.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In other words, the purpose of the Senetar from Nebroske is simply to show that he as a promi-

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In other words, the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska is simply to show that he, as a prominent member of the Populist party, is not in favor of violating the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President. The Senator from Oregon is not skirmishing up to the line close enough. The purpose of the Senator from Nebraska is to show that the Populist party throughout the United States understands this question quite as well as does the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from any other State, and when the assertion is made, if it shall be made after this from any source, through whatever motives may inspire the utterance, that it is the purpose of the Populist party in Nebraska or elsewhere to ignore contracts or to impair their obligations or to impair property rights the statement will be mendacious, because the truth will have been known before the utterance was made. I hope that is satisfactory to my friend the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not see how we shall know anything more about the opinion of the Populist party in consequence of the proposed resolution of the Senate. I was not aware that the Senate represented the Populist party, or that any Senator represented the Populist party. I supposed that Senators represented their States, without distinction of party, when they came here. It is the first time I ever heard of the Senate undertaking to define the opinions of particular political parties, or to make to define the opinions of particular political parties, or to make platforms or declarations, or, to use the phrase of the Senator from Nebraska, to skirmish up to the line in their favor. It seems to me it is introducing into the Senate what does not belong here, and is giving a new character to the Senate, making a very grave change in its constitutional purpose.

The Senate was intended by its framers to be above political parties; to be the final tribunal in which, after the clamor, anger, parties; to be the final tribunal in which, after the clamor, anger, strife, and heat of political campaigns were over, where questions in reference to the well-being of the American people should be settled upon their merits without regard to popular anger or strife or discussion. It never was supposed by the framers of the Government that this was to be the place for political parties to be skirmishing for petty advantage, or that it was to be the place where speeches made in the canvass would be answered. Such purposes do not belong to this Chamber. They do not belong to the Senatorial character. They do not belong either to the dignity or the authority of the Senate; and while of course every Senator is supposed to believe and to intend to act upon every mandate of the instrument which he has sworn to support and to carry out in is supposed to believe and to intend to act upon every mandate of the instrument which he has sworn to support and to carry out in the highest good faith everything which the Constitution declares it to be his duty to carry out, it seems to me, I will not say that it is puerile, but trifling to bring in such matters here. I understand from the Senator from Nebraska that he referred to some utterance of mine. I do not think I have ever discussed to some utterance of mine. I do not think I have ever discussed the question of the purposes of the State of Nebraska or of the Populist party there. I do not remember ever having alluded to the Populist party in a public speech during the recent campaign or at any other time, although, of course, it is not impossible that I may have done so without now remembering it. The utterance to which the Senator alluded spoke of the adhesion of the majority of the people of that State and other States—for which I expressed the highest respect—to certain political beliefs; States where schools abound, where churches abound, where the farming population is the backbone of the community, usually wise, conservative, sound, patriotic, observing public faith and regarding public honor.

The speech which I made was one made for the purpose of calling the attention of the business men of the community to which I belong to their faults, to their errors, to their mistakes. what I am willing to repeat anywhere, that the first thing to be done, if we wished to get the confidence of our brethren of the West, was for the business men of New England to lend their powerful influence to putting down the evils which have grown up in the business management of the country. I said that the unlawful management of railroads, that the careless and fraudulent deliver with rubble treats that the charges of converte powers. ful management of railroads, that the careless and fraudulent dealing with public trusts, that the abuses of corporate powers must stop if they expected to get the ear of their brethren in distant parts of the country in regard to their views on financial policies. That is what I said, and I said it at home, which was the fit place to say it, to people to whom I thought the lesson might be of some value. But, of course, I do not shrink or flinch from repetition of it. I did speak of the proposition to establish silver monometallism in this country without the help of other countries, to have a fluctuating, constantly shrinking standard of value for the payment of debts, foreign and domestic, as a passionate crusade of dishonor, and that I stand by here and everywhere else.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very glad to hear the senior Senator from Massachusetts express himself so plainly upon this question. It occurs to me that there is no reason why the resolution should occurs to me that there is no reason why the resolution should not be adopted by the Senate unless the Republican party is perfectly willing to drift away from a doctrine which is a part and parcel of our Constitution.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts that the I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate is not the place to represent political parties as such, but I must say in this connection that in the four years I have been a member of this body there never has been a day when the Senate was in session that political parties were not represented here in their highest and completest sense in the transaction of public business; and no one has participated in that to a greater extent than has the senior Senator from Massachusetts. He has fought and maneuvered for his party upon this floor from day to day.

I am speaking, Mr. President, in presenting this resolution, from a higher plane than merely as the spokesman, if I may call myself such, of a political party. The senior Senator from Massachusetts deliberately uttered at a meeting of the Home Market Club on the 23d of November, the statement that the people of Nebraska and Kansas had engaged in a passionate crusade of dishonor; and now he stands here and repeats the statement in substance. He was not kind enough to distinguish between Republicans and was not kind enough to distinguish between Republicans and Democrats and Populists in those States, but the States as organ-ized communities came within the language used by him. I do not know of any right which the Senator from Massachusetts pos-sesses to stand in Boston or elsewhere and characterize the people of Nebraska with having engaged in a passionate crusade of dishonor. It strikes me that the language was unguarded, that it was intemperate in the extreme coming from a gentleman of his age and experience in public life.

What interest does the Senator from Massachusetts possess in the State of Nebraska, or in the State of Kansas for that matter, which should permit him to speak of a million and a quarter of people as being engaged in a crazy crusade of passionate dishonor in casting their honest and intelligent votes for Bryan electors? Mr. Bryan is a citizen of the State, an honored citizen of the State; a Bryan is a citizen of the State, an honored citizen of the State; a citizen of whom any State in this Union ought to be proud; in my judgment the greatest popular orator who has occupied the attention of the people of the United States since the days of Webster and Clay; a man of good education and large experience, although young in years; a conscientious believer in the doctrine of bimetallism as he understands it and as I understand it. Would it not have been better for the Senator from Massachusetts and his associates to have accorded to Mr. Bryan and to the people of Nebraska the right to think and act as they saw fit, if they did it within the

Now, it is for the purpose of stamping, as far as I can, all such assertions as false that the resolution is introduced. I care not whether or not it is adopted here. The Senator from Massachusetts may oppose it with his great intellect and his great influence setts may oppose it with his great intellect and his great influence if he desires. I wished to bring this question to the attention of the people of this country, and to state that any statement that the people of Nebraska, or any statement that the Populist party, wherever triumphant, has the slightest desire or purpose to impair the obligation of contracts is a mere gratuitous and unwarranted assertion. To relieve the Senate of this matter I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the resolution goes from the attention of the Senate I should like to inquire whether my amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I accepted the Senator's amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. PLATT. Before the resolution is referred to the committee

I should like to propose an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution the following:

And that in the opinion of the Senate no law should be passed by Congress the effect of which will be to impair the obligation of contracts.

Mr. ALLEN. Let them both go as they are to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps the Senator will accept that amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to reject it and I do not want to accept it. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that both the resolution and the amendment go to the Committee on the

Mr. PLATT. Very well. Mr. PEFFER. I assume Mr. PEFFER. I assume, Mr. President, that the object the Senator from Nebraska had in view in offering the resolution was to express his opinions concerning the charges which have been recently made in the newspaper press of the country and by some men of eminence in law and in politics that some of the Western States, and especially Nebraska and Kansas by name, are governed lawlessly; that they are under the rule of men whose natural political tendencies are in harmony, working together toward anarchy, toward the revocation of contracts, toward the nullification of law. The Senator has put his case mildly and decorously, as he always does, and now that the discussion seems to be taking a wide range I myself feel called upon to say something about it.

Some newspapers in New York City, Chicago, and other cities have taken occasion to go out of their way, outside of the legitimate course of journalism, in order to make political capital out of misfortunes that have befallen the Western people, and in doing so they have undertaken to brand us as men without honor, men without conscience, and that we are undertaking to rule the community through the power of revolutionary ideas.

So far as the State of Kansas is concerned, Mr. President, I think 1875 we were visited by a cloud of grasshoppers, when many of our wheat fields were absolutely denuded, trees stripped of their verdure, and whole farms were left destitute by the ravages of the devouring insects. I was a member of the State senate during the session of 1875 and 1876, and took an active part in rendering relief session of 1575 and 1576, and took an active part in rendering rener to our own people simply because of those troubles. But the relief took the form of a bill appropriating money out of the treasury, and at that time we had a surplus of some $90,000. The bill did not pass. We made up our minds finally that we could take care of ourselves, and we did so. But during that session a bill was proposed to enact a stay law, so that judgments then in force might be stayed and that the time of the payment of debts might be postponed in order that the people might pass over another year and have an opportunity to meet their obligations without great loss. However, that bill was not passed, and so far as I can recollect there has never been a stay law passed in our State.

The only legislation of a character which might by any possible construction be regarded as interfering with the rights of creditors was one passed by the legislature in 1889. It was an act reducing the legal rate of interest from 7 per cent to 6 per cent. We had there, as I think they have in most of the Northwestern States, two limits to the rate of interest, one recognized as the legal rate, to be enforced when no stipulation had been made by the parties, and the other known as the contract rate, where persons may contract for a particular rate of interest, not to exceed the one named. At that time our legal rate was 7 per cent and our contract rate was 12 per cent. That law was repealed and another one enacted in its stead making the legal rate 6 per cent and the contract rate 10 per cent. That was done under the jurisdiction of a Republican administration. The Republican majority was overwhelming. It was before the birth of the Populist party. There were not to exceed five or six Democrats in both houses of the legislature. Kansas never has been regarded as good soil for Democracy, and it is not even yet. That was in 1889.

In 1890 came what was properly regarded as a political revolution in that State. In the election campaign of that year the Populists elected five members of Congress out of eight. They elected an overwhelming majority of the legislature, and we believed then and still believe that we elected our governor, or cast votes enough to elect him. But a Republican governor was inaugurated. During the session of the legislature which fol-lowed there was nothing of the character to which these newspapers allude. There was nothing revolutionary either proposed or enacted. There were no stay laws passed. There were no laws passed affecting the obligation of contracts in any way except it be in what I shall state; and I think lawyers who are listening to me will agree with me that there was no attempt to affect or no effect upon the obligation of contracts in that law. It was an act authorizing mortgagors to redeem their lands when sold under foreclosure proceedings in court.

Mr. PLATT. After sale?

Mr. PEFFER. After sale. That remedy was proposed in the Republican State convention held the August preceding, if I remember correctly the month. A resolution was introduced giving it as the sense of the Republican party of the State that a redemption law allowing two years should be passed. It was finally compromised after a very full discussion by able men in that convention by making it one year; and as a further compromise the next legislature passed an act making the redemption period the next legislature passed an act making the redemption period eighteen months. That is all that was done in that respect. A question came up in the court afterwards whether the act applied to contracts already existing at the time the law was passed. The court held that it did not. Afterwards the chief justice resigned. His successor was appointed by the Republican governor; and during the administration of the chief justice appointed by the Republican governor in the chief justice appointed by the resulting the second of the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and the chief justice appointed by the resulting governor and governor a Republican governor a similar case (perhaps the same one) was brought to the attention of the court again; and then by a majority of the court it was held that the law applied to existing contracts as well as to those in future. I remember the case came to the Supreme Court of the United States and the State court was over-

With those exceptions, there has been nothing attempted or enacted in any way affecting the relations between debtor and creditor in the State of Kansas.

Yesterday I stole an hour or two from the Lord (if I may be allowed that expression) and ran through the statutes of Kansas for 1893 and 1895-one day last week I had gone through the statutes for 1891-in order to ascertain whether there had been any such legislation as that enacted in our State without my knowledge, and I found absolutely nothing. On the other hand, I found that the legislature in several instances assisted cities in the refunding of their bonds and enabling them in different ways to pay their debts so that there should be no further difficulty about it. I know something about that State. I have lived there more than a quarter of a century, and from the beginning of that period until this time I have had more or less to do with the political conditions of the State. I remember very well that during the years 1874 and maturity the legislature, wherever it had the constitutional power. came to the rescue of the people in order that our debts might be

And now, Mr. President, once for all, I take occasion to say that the people of Kansas are an honest people. They are brave, generous-hearted people. I have here a number of newspaper extracts (which I will not trouble the Senate with reading, nor will I have them placed in the RECORD at this time, unless the discussion continues further) in which a large number of the newspapers in our State are taking up the cause of the people. If no other good comes out of this discussion it will be that our Republican friends in that State have finally come to the conclusion that through some of their own mismanagement, and through their partisan zeal, they have themselves injured the State by publishing to the world what the Populists were going to do, for political purposes only.

Our people, I say, are an honest people. They are a brave and generous people. If anything has ever been given to them in the way of charity it has been repaid a thousandfold. I have in my way of charity it has been repaid a thousandfold. I have in my mind's eye now a train of twenty-odd cars going from the State of Kansas laden with corn for the succor of the people of the Ohio Valley in their distress at a time when the floods overtook them and destroyed their property. We have rendered assistance in many ways, in every available form, when it came in our way to do so. I do hope that these attacks made upon the honesty and integrity of our people will cease. I have here, as I said, a number of newspaper extracts in which this matter is brought to the attention of the people, and I think in every instance I have yet seen, with a single exception, the attacks are denounced as fraudulent and malicious; and these good people are standing up for their homes and for the honor of the folks at home.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 130) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Augustus P. Burditt; and

A bill (H. R. 2741) for the relief of Peter Cook, of Arkansas.

The bill (H. R. 7083) to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds

The bill (H. R. 8413) to confirm certain cash entries of public lands was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee

PROPOSED RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill laws of the United States. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On the 5th day of June last the joint resolution (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States, was made a special order for to-day at 2 o'clock. I am not disposed, if it can be avoided, to antagonize nor displace the unfinished business, which is the immigration bill pending. I do desire, however, that some agreement can be had so that this special order shall hold its place and be considered at a very early day.

some agreement can be had so that this special order shall hold its place and be considered at a very early day.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to state to the Senator from Oregon and other Senators interested in the immigration bill that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Gibson] has just been compelled to leave the Chamber on account of sickness. He was directed by his doctor to go home and take care of himself, and asked me to so state to the Senate. I hope this measure, in which he feels a very great interest, will be laid over until he comes back.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that doubtless no one is disposed to speak upon the joint resolution proposing the election of United States Senators by the people. I do not understand from the Senator from the joint resolution proposing the election of United States Senators by the people. I do not understand from the Senator from Oregon that such is the case; and necessarily, therefore, as the Senate will not be in a position to vote upon the joint resolution to-day, it must go over to another day. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object to its going over another day; and then we can go on with the immigration bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state that so far as I am concerned personally, I do not desire to discuss the joint resolution further. I have discussed it at length on several occasions at previous sessions of the Senate. It has also been discussed at considerable length by Senators on both sides of the Chamber, by Senators favoring the constitutional amendment and by Senators opposing the amendment. I was in hopes that we might be able to reach a vote upon it; and unless some Senator indicates a desire to discuss the joint resolution further I shall feel inclined to move to take it up for the purpose of having a vote at this time.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been pretty vigorously opposed to the joint resolution, as the Senator from Oregon knows, and if it is to be pressed to a vote there will be further debate upon it. I had supposed that this Populist idea would disappear after the election of last November. I hope that whenever it comes to be voted upon, if it is voted upon, the Republicans, the McKinley voted upon, if it is voted upon, the Republicans, the McKinley Republicans, Silver Republicans, the Bryan Democrats, and the Palmer and Buckner Democrats will all vote against it, and leave no votes for this Populist proposition except the members of the Populist party in the Senate. It will be equally agreeable to me if the Senator from Oregon would drop the whole thing.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can hardly see how the Senator from New Hampshire is justified in denominating it a Populist proposition, in view of the fact that a majority of Republicans upon the committee of which he is a distinguished member have joined in a report favoring the proposition, and in view of the further fact, as I think he will find when the matter comes to a vote, that more than one-half of the Republicans of the Senate are vote, that more than one-half of the Republicans of the Senate are in favor of the proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Republican members of the committee who joined with the Senator from Oregon were, in my judgment, overcome by the seductive influences of the Senator from Oregon overcome by the seductive influences of the Senator from Oregon and formed their opinion too hastily. I trust that, having been instructed by the result of the late election, they will now see that this proposition to overturn the ancient ways of the fathers, to change the Constitution for the first time in the history of the country, so far as the form of carrying on the Government is concerned, is wholly and utterly vicious. That is one reason why it will be necessary to delay the vote, in order to give the two Senators whom the Senator from Oregon persuaded to allow him to make this majority report (the report always having been against the measure prior to the present Congress) an opportunity to see the error of their ways and join in overwhelming the Senator's proposition by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Having been complimented so highly in regard to the effect of my influence in committee and elsewhere, I am encouraged to persist in the hope, although perhaps it is a vain hope, that I may succeed ultimately in bringing the Senator from New Hampshire to a correct view of this proposition. If the Senator does not object I think I shall move to sition. If the Senator does not object I think I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FRYE. That would displace the unfinished business, as the Senator knows.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Such a vote would test the sense of the Senate

Mr. CHANOLER. The Senator has always been entirely courteous in reference to the joint resolution, as those of us who are opposed to it have endeavored to be in return. I should prefer that the Senator would consent to let it remain where it is for a few days with a view of ascertaining whether further debate is needed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As I stated in the outset, I hesitate to do anything that will displace the pending measure—that is, the immigration bill—because I favor it. In view of all the circumstances, I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the joint resolution be made the unfinished business after House bill 3656, providing for free homesteads on the public lands in Oklahoma Territory for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, which, by unanimous consent, is to come up, I understand, after the disposition of the immigration bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not willing to have the joint resolution made the unfinished business. The Senator from Massachusetts in charge of the immigration bill I do not now see in the Chamber. Why would it not be satisfactory to the Senator to make it the special order for next Monday at 2 o'clock? I suggest whether the special order prevails over the unfinished business. I imagine it does not

Mr. FRYE. It does not. Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to submit that question

Mr. Histories of Original Tuesday to Stability of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admit the Senator can make the motion, of course, but, as I said, it would divide the Senate. I suggest to the Senator that until the debate is exhausted he ought not to divide the Senator on the question, and that he ought to be willing to make the joint resolution a special order for some day in the near future.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. This thing of making special orders, I have discovered during my service in the Senate, does not amount to very much.

Mr. FRYE. Not to anything.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It does not really amount to anything, as suggested by the Senator from Maine. Here is a special order solemnly made on the 5th of June last, and yet I am told, and I believe it is the correct rule, that the unfinished business takes precedence and the special order falls. So, in view of all the circumstances, believing, as I firmly do, that I can move at any time I see proper when I can get the floor to take up this proposition, I simply give notice that at an early date, when opportunity presents, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 6. That will enable the immigration bill to be disposed of at this time.

joint resolution No. 6. That will enable the immigration bill to be disposed of at this time.

Mr. PLATT. That course is best.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is courteous, as usual.

Mr. QUAY. I do not know that I shall desire to discuss the joint resolution at any period of its progress through the Senate, and I rise merely to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he be not hasty in calling it up and putting it upon its final passage, because it is possible that there may be a few occurrences in my own State which may be developed before the Senate which will reenforce his theory, and its passage may be assisted by permitting it to lie over.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a statement of the amendment now

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a statement of the amendment now before the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the unfinished business, which is the immigration bill, is before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that my colleague [Mr. GIBSON], who has taken very great interest in this measure, and had expected to participate in the debate to-day, and also in relation to the proposed amendments, is too ill to remain in the Chamber. Against the advice of his physician he came here, but was compelled to leave the cloakroom. He requested me to make this statement to the Senate and to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in view of this fact, to permit the bill to go over. Senators on this side of the Chamber to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in view of this fact, to permit the bill to go over. Senators on this side of the Chamber who saw my colleague to-day know that it was utterly impossible for him to remain here. I would not make the request except under the circumstances. I know how desirous the Senator from Massachusetts is to press the bill; but I ask him to let it go over until to-morrow, when I hope my colleague will be in condition to be present and participate in the debate.

Mr. LODGE. If an agreement can be made fixing a time before the holiday recess for a vote on the bill, I am perfectly willing to let it go over to-day. But I have postponed the bill over and over again. I postponed it last session to oblige the Senator from Maryland when he wanted to go to Annapolis one day; and I have tried again. I postponed it last session to oblige the Senator from Maryland when he wanted to go to Annapolis one day; and I have tried to be as obliging as I possibly could be. The time is very short. I do not wish to press it unduly, but it is here and is stopping other business in the Senate. I am very anxious to have a vote of the Senate upon it. If we can come to an agreement to take a vote before the holiday recess, I shall be very happy to put it over

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator then that he name some hour on Friday at which to take a vote upon the bill. I understand the resolution to adjourn for the holidays will not take effect until Tuesday of next week.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to adjourn over takes effect on Thursday, I understand.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that he had better name Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that he had better name Thursday rather than Friday, because it is the almost unbroken precedent of the Senate to adjourn at the beginning of a session from Thursday to Monday. The resolution which I submitted this morning was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. I will suggest 4 o'clock Thursday.

Mr. HALE. That is better.

Mr. LODGE. That is entirely satisfactory to me, if an agreement can be made that the vote shall be taken on the bill and pending amendments at 4 o'clock Thursday.

Mr. HALE. Without further debate. I agree to that entirely. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the final vote be taken upon the bill and amendments, without further debate, at 4 o'clock on Thursday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Then, in compliance with the request of the Senator from Maryland, I am perfectly willing not to press the bill at this time, understanding that it keeps its place as the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.
Mr. PLATT. There is a joint resolution, I think, lying on the table, which came from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FRYE. The immigration bill is informally laid aside.

Mr. MILLS. To be voted upon on Thursday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

USE OF ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 162) continuing in force section 2 of the act approved June 3, 1896, entitled "An act to repeal section 61 of 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 28, 1894.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Platt, Mr. Aldrich, and Mr. Jones of Arkansas were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H.R. 3771) for the relief of Stratton H. Benscoter.

The message also announced that the House had passed a con-He message also almounced that the House had passed a con-current resolution providing for the adjournment of the two Houses of Congress on Tuesday, the 22d day of December, 1896, until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, January 5, 1897; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (H. R. 2604) to increase the pension of Caroline A. Hough, widow of Brig. Gen. John Hough; and

A bill (H. R. 4354) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volumers of the state of the states of unteers, deceased.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution from the House of Representatives in relation to the holiday adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Burrows in the chair). Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read:

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, the 22d day of December, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, January 5, 1897.

Mr. HALE. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is no special business fixed for to-day, Is uggest that we take up the pension cases which are pending on the Calendar and proceed with their consideration. I believe there are a number of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the first pension case on the Calendar will be

CELESTIA R. BARRY.

CELESTIA R. BARRY.

The bill (H. R. 1891) granting a pension to Celestia R. Barry was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was done with the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach, which stands on the Calendar ahead of the bill the title of which has just been stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that bill was vetoed by the President, and has not been called up.

The bill (H. R. 1891) granting a pension to Celestia R. Barry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Celestia R. Barry, widow of Claudius C. Barry, deceased, late a private in Captain Commor's Company, Bell's Regiment Mexican War Volunteers, and to allow her a pension of $8 a month. her a pension of $8 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. JOHNSON.

The bill (S. 2184) granting a pension to William F. Johnson was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill has been adversely reported, and I do not know why it should not be indefinitely postponed, so as to get it off the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill was once indefinitely postponed and then that the vote by which it was indefinitely postponed was reconsidered and the bill placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well. Let it remain on the Calendar,

SARAH WEEDON JONES.

The bill (H. R. 1178) granting a pension to Sarah Weedon Jones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah Weedon Jones, former widow of John H. Weedon, deceased, who was a sergeant in Company I, Fourth United States Infantry, in the Mexican war, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. LUCY A. ALLEN.

The bill (H. R. 2969) to grant a pension to Mrs. Lucy A. Allen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Lucy A. Allen, widow of Capt. William R. Allen, late of Company C, Third Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.
The PRESIDING OFFICER, The report will be read.
The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER
May 23, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2969) granting a pension to Lucy A. Allen, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives hereto appended is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The petitioner, Lucy A. Allen, is the widow of William R. Allen, late captain in Company C, Third Regiment Kansas Volunteers. She applied to the Pension Bureau for a pension, and her application was rejected upon the ground that her husband could not be recognized as in the service of the United States. The evidence shows that Captain Allen enlisted in said company and regiment, and was commissioned captain by the governor of Kansas on the 23d day of July, 1861.

The regiment rendered service and was under control of the United States officers until it was mustered out on the 14th day of February, 1862.

At the time the regiment was mustered out Captain Allen was a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, and he was mustered out or discharged at some later date.

The widow is very poor, having no means of support and no property. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCK RELLI. I should like to ask if the amount proposed

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask if the amount proposed by the bill is the amount that is allowed by law to the widow of a captain?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not able to answer the question, but some member of the Committee on Pensions no doubt can do so.

Mr. PLATT. What is the amount named in the bill?

Mr. PLATT. What is the amount named in the bill?
Mr. COCKRELL. Twenty dollars.
Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. PLATT. That is a captain's pension.
The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY B. PRINCE.

The bill (H. R. 1827) granting a pension to Nancy B. Prince, widow of Elbert Prince, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Nancy B. Prince, widow of Elbert Prince, late private of companies commanded by Captains Christmas and Spirey, Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836, and to pay her a pension of §8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHCEBE M. WOOLLEY PALMETER.

The bill (H. R. 1599) granting a pension to Phœbe M. Woolley Palmeter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It pro-Palmeter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Phœbe M. Woolley Palmeter, daughter of Jonathan Woolley, who was a soldier and pensioner of the Revolutionary war, at $12 per month. Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read. The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. Peffer May 26, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1599) granting a pension to Phoebe M. Woolley Palmeter, have examined the same and report:

HOUSE REPORT.

HOUSE REPORT.

The claimant is a daughter of Jonathan Woolley, who served for sixteen months as a private in Captain Capron's company of Vermont Volunteers in the war of the Revolution. The soldier was a pensioner at the time of his death, in 1845, and his widow, Anna Woolley, drew a pension up to about 1858, when she died.

It is shown by the testimony of J. L. Short, Edward R. D. Mayne, and Albert L. York, citizens of Madison County, N. Y., that the claimant is about 80 years old, very infirm, and entirely without property or income, she being entirely dependent upon others for support.

It further appears that her husband, Russell Palmeter, died in 1890, and that she has since remained his widow; also that she is a woman of excellent character and one who enjoys the respect of everyone who knows her.

There are several precedents for the allowance of pensions to the aged and destitute daughters of Revolutionary soldiers, and in view of the facts stated above the passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. COCKRELII. L have uniformly opposed similar bills and

Mr. COCKRELL. I have uniformly opposed similar bills, and have made a contest over a number of them, but finally they prevailed. I simply desire to place myself on record as opposed to the principle involved in this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALICE V. COOK.

The bill (S. 3151) granting a pension to Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul, Nebr., invalid daughter of John Y. Cook, deceased, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, was

Company B, Eighth Regiment Raises of three littles, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul., Nebr., invalid daughter of John Y. Cook, deceased, late of Company D. Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll of the United States at a monthly pension of $12, to be paid as other pensions are paid under the general laws of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read. The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. Peffer May 26, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3151) granting a pension to Alice V. Cook, of St. Paul, Nebr., have considered the same, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The record shows that said Alice V. Cook is the insane daughter of John Y. Cook, who enlisted on the 5th day of November, 1861, at Sabetha, Kans., as a private in Company D. Eighth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers, to serve three years. He was mustered in at Fort Leavenworth, November 9, 1861.

The records of the War Department show that said soldier died in the hospital at Fort Leavenworth on February 13, 1863, of smallpox, which disease he contracted while in the line of his duty and in the service of the United States.

he contracted while in the line of his duty and in the service of the United States.

The records also show that said soldier's widow, Serena Cook, applied for and was granted a pension at the rate of $8 per month, which was stopped on the 28th day of January, 1864, when she remarried.

Said soldier left surviving him three children, namely: Alonzo, born April 22, 1855; Alice V., born September 27, 1858; Amos J., born August 9, 1861.

A pension of $2 per month (pension certificate No. 107282) was paid to the mother of said soldier's children, now Serena Martindale, as guardian of said three children, until they respectively became 16 years of age. The $2 per month for Alice V. Cook therefore ceased on the 26th day of September, 1874.

The evidence in this case shows that said Alice V. Cook is now, and has been since she was a small child, unable to take care of herself, having had epileptic fits ever since she was 2 years old. She has continued to be afflicted ever since, so that her mind has been weakened, and she is a large part of the time in the insane asylum, and is all the time in a helpless condition and requires the attention of some one to look after her. She has not now and never had any means of support of her own.

The father of said Alice V. Cook died while in the service of the United States, and it is reasonable to suppose that his last thoughts were about this poor, afflicted child, Alice, and it is but fair to presume that if this soldier had lived he would have provided a support for his unfortunate daughter.

There are many precedents where Congress has granted pensions to the poor, helpless, and dependent children of those who served in the United States, Army during the war.

Under the special circumstances of this case your committee recommend that the bill do pass when amended by striking out the words "twenty-five," in line 8, and inserting "twelve."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES EDSON.

CHARLES EDSON.

The bill (S. 2481) granting a pension to Charles Edson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll, at $50 per month, the name of Charles Edson, late a private in Company C, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill proposed to pay $50 a month to a private soldier. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. Cannon May 26, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2481) granting a pension to Charles Edson, have examined the same and report:

The bill proposes to pension the petitioner at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension of $12 per month which he now receives under the act of June 27, 1890.

The papers in the case show the pensioner to have served under the name of George Hancock as a private in Company C, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, from September 15, 1894, to June 23, 1865, and it does not appear that while serving therein he contracted any permanent disability. No claim for pension under the general law has ever been filed, but in May, 1892, an application under the act of June 27, 1890, was made, based on rheumatism, first noticed by claimant about 1879. A medical examination by the Ogden (Utah) board disclosed "progressive muscular atrophy" (claimant had erred in his description of his disability), which was then rated at "second grade" ($30), but under the act claimed only $12 per month could be allowed.

In March, 1896, and in support of the bill under consideration, a petition, signed by 29 citizens of Ogden, Utah, was filed, reciting that the pensioner was suffering from—

"Total disability to perform any kind of manual labor, inability to take care of himself, and requires the aid of an assistant the whole time, being unable to walk alone or to get up out of a chair without assistance; this condition was caused by progressive muscular atrophy, resulting in paralvsis of both hips and legs, and has existed for five years last past. The said Charles Edson is a poor man, has a family, is a good citizen, and in every way worthy."

There is also on file a certificate from the present president of the Ogden pension board of surgeons, dated February 17, 1896, stating:

"At this time he freferring to Mr. Edson] is totally disabled from performing any manual labor, by reason of locomotor ataxia. He will,

It will be observed that this certificate last quoted indicates a degree of helplessness which, if of conceded service origin, would entitle the petitioner to $72 per month, but while the origin of the disabling cause is, in this case, confessedly obsqure the contention is not advanced that it should be attributed to the soldier's service.

The facts which influence the committee in their recommendation are the petitioner's honorable service in the Fifth New Hampshire Infantry, known to history as the "Fighting Fifth," having had 175 men killed out of the original 967, and of recruits (petitioner was one of these recruits) 120 killed out of 1,559, he having participated in the engagements before Petersburg in the autumn and winter of 1864-65, at Fort Steadman and Dinwiddie Court-House, Va., in March, 1865, and Sailors Creek and Farmville, Va., in April, 1865, his regiment during this period having been a part of the Second Corps; and it should be here noted that the soldier was but 19 years of age when he enlisted, and secondly, the petitioner's deplorable condition and the total inadequacy of his income to afford the necessaries incident to said condition. The prognosis of his disease is inevitably unfavorable, and a specialist on locomotor ataxia writes. "The average duration of this disease is seven years; recovery is scarcely to be hoped for;" therefore, in this case (the disease having now existed several years) a fatal termination at an early day is expected. Precedents exist for granting the relief sought by this bill, and in 1866 Congress passed bills H. R. 473 and 2771, for relief of William Boone and Francis Deming upon a showing of facts similar to those presented herein; and the present Congress in case of Francis E. Hoover (H. R. 1094) has recognized a like principle. As to the rate recommended, it can not be held to be an unusual one, since the present House Committee on Invalid Pensions and on Pensions have favorably passed, thus far, on 130 bills carrying a pension of $50 or more per month.

Thi

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr.

Palmer May 26, 1896:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 986) for the relief of Hiram P. Pauley, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives hereto appended is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

The affiant, Hiram P. Pauley, was a member of Capt. Marion Blair's company of what was known as the Indiana Legion, a militia organization of the State of Indiana. During the Morgan raid the company was ordered to Indianapolis to prepare to meet the invading army. It went to the United States arsenal to secure arms, and the affiant among others was ordered to open the boxes containing arms for the company, and while so engaged in lifting a box of guns received a serious injury, producing hernia of a serious character. From this injury the claimant has never since recovered, and by reason thereof is rendered totally incapable of performing manual labor. He is now old and destitute. He can not be pensioned under the existing law for the reason that he was never mustered into the United States service.

Your committee believe that inasmuch as the claimant received his injury while in an organized company preparing to defend the country against an invading army he has just claims on that country for relief. They therefore report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in this case be read.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.
The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. PALMER May 26, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1881) granting a pension to Lydia Chapman, have examined the same and report:

A similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives during the present session, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably, and is adopted as a part of this report.

HOUSE REPORT.

According to the committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R., 4008) to pension Lydia Chapman, submit the following report:

Samuel J. Chapman was the minor son of the claimant. He was steersman on board the transport steamer B. M. Runyon, which was impressed by the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, for the transportation of troops and stores on the Mississippi River in July, 1864. The boat was snagged and sunk about 100 miles above Vicksburg July 21, 1864, and Samuel J. Chapman drowned.

His mother was, at the time of his death, dependent upon him for support. The claimant, before marriage to Edmund Chapman, was a Miss Lydia Dryden, a daughter of William Dryden, a soldier in the Revolutionary war. She is a widow now, nearly 90 years of age, and without any property except a life estate in an old house in Upper Acton, Ill., so old and poor that for some years it has not had a tenant. She is dependent upon a feelbe unmarried daughter, who supports herself and mother by sewing.

The above facts appear from letters of the Auditor of the Treasury for the War Department and the Quartermaster-General, United States Army; a letter from the deceased, shortly before his death, informing his parents of the shipment by express of money to them; the evidence on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, and by the statements of the sister of the deceased, given to the subcommittee.

The Commissioner of Pensions properly rejected claimant's claim for pension as dependent mother under the law on the ground that there was "no title, claimant's son not having been in the military or naval service of the United States."

Your committee believe that under the circumstances the deceased lost his life in the service of his country. Transports, whether chartered or impressed, were under military orders. They went, and were obliged to go, into the enemy's country. The claimant is needy; she was dependent on this son for support; he lost his life while at important work in the interest of

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman presenting this bill whether it does not necessitate the creation of an additional Federal judge?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It does not. This is a bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session and went to the President, but reached him so late that he did not sign it. The matter has been passed upon twice by the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill does not provide for the appointment of an additional judge, but merely for the holding of court at another point in the district.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why is it necessary to have a new district there?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The bill does not make a new district; it simply makes a new division of the eastern district.

Mr. HOPKINS. All there is in it, then, is to take certain counties from one district and put them in another?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No; it does not do that; it simply makes another division in the existing district. It does not interfere with any other district, does not take any counties from another district, but simply authorizes the holding of court at another district, but simply authorizes the holding of court at another point in the eastern district.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time,

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk. The resolution was read, as follows:

 ${\it Resolved},$ That the Senate be requested to return House bill 3771 to the House of Representatives.

The resolution was adopted.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

M1. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a special order that Thursday of this week be substituted for to-day so far as the consideration of District of Columbia business is concerned.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have a report printed as a House document in connection with a bill that will come up for consideration on Thursday. It is a letter from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia to the House District Committee, relating to the extension of North Capitol street through the Prospect Hill Cemetery.

There was no objection, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OUACHITA RIVER.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, Iask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill (H. R. 6750) "to authorize the mayor and city council of Monroe, La., to construct a traffic bridge across the Ouachita River opposite said city." I think it will hardly be necessary to read the bill at length. I ask that the report be read instead.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill ought to be read. The bill was read at length. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, inserting after the word "Monroe," the words "and the police jury of the parish of Ouachita," was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a

JOHN J. GUERIN.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8197) for the relief of John T. Guerin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the record in the case of Corpl. John Grant, discharged as corporal of the Marine Corps at Portsmouth, N. H., December 26, 1889, and grant him an honorable discharge in his rightful name, John J. Guerin.

CHARLES T. TROWBRIDGE, ETC.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, H. R. 7282, for the relief of Charles T. Trowbridge and others. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Charles T. Trowbridge shall be held and considered to have been mustered into service as a captain, George D. Walker as a first lieutenant, and John A. Trowbridge as a second lieutenant, of the First Regiment of South Carolina (colored) Volunteers, on the 8th day of May, 1862; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be paid to them, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of their respective grades from said date until the 12th day of October, 1862, less any pay and allowances that they have already received as enlisted men for the same period.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know something about this bill before I consent to its consideration at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read, as it will give the desired information.

The report (by Mr. MARSH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3392) for the relief of Charles T. Trowbridge, George D. Walker, and John A. Trowbridge, having had the same under consideration, substitute therefor H. R. 7282, and recommend that the same do pass, and attach hereto and make a part of this report the War Department report.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 11, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In returning herewith the papers left by you at the Department yesterday, relative to the pending bill (H. R. 3892) for the relief of Charles T. Trowbridge, George D. Walker, and John A. Trowbridge, I have the honor to advise you as follows, in compliance with your request for information relative to the service of these men:

Charles T. Trowbridge was a sergeant of Company F, First New York Engineers, and on May 8, 1862, he was detailed by General Benham to raise a company for a negro regiment. John A. Trowbridge was a corporal of Company F, First New York Engineers, and is reported as "detached for a negro regiment" on May 8, 1862. George D. Walker was a corporal of Company I, First New York Engineers, and was ordered on detached service some time in May or June, 1863. Although the exact date of the order and the character of his service are not shown, it is probable that he was detailed at about the same time the two Trowbridges were, and was engaged in recruiting for the same regiment of negro troops.

It appears that these men never returned to duty as enlisted men of the First New York Engineers, but that they all received commissions in the First South Carolina (colored) Volunteers on October 13, 1862, Charles T. Trowbridge being appointed a captain, George D. Walker a first lieutenant, and John A. Trowbridge a second lieutenant.

The regiment for which these men were engaged in recruiting did not complete its organization, but was disbanded by order of Major-General Hunter on or about August 10, 1862, and the records do not show what duty they were engaged upon until October 13, 1862, on which date they were appointed commissioned officers of the First South Carolina (colored) Volunteers, but it is to be presumed that they were employed in organizing that regiment.

Although these officers had new regiments the governors of States should have authority to appoint a second lieutenant for each company to muster into service such recruits as might be enlisted by him, but that if he should fail to secure an organized company within such reasonable time as the governor might designate, his men might be transferred to some other company, his appointment be revoked, and he discharged without pay.

It is, of course, impossible to determine now how many men were recruited for the First South Carolina Volunteers by Captain Trowbridge, First Lieutenant Walker, and Second Lieut. John A. Trowbridge, but the fact that they were mustered into the service of the United States as commissioned officers of this regiment is evidence that their service in connection with the organization of it was satisfactory.

Although these men were all regularly appointed as commissioned officers on October 13, 1862, and were regularly mustered into service under their appointments, there was no authority of law for paying them as such prior to the date of their appointment, and consequently they merely received the pay of enlisted men from May 8 to October 13, 1862. The object of the pending bill is evidently to give to them for this period the difference between their pay as enlisted men and the pay which they would have received if they had been appointed and mustered into service as commissioned officers on May 8, 1862.

The bill is defective in that it proposes a "muster" to be made in a service that long ago passed out of existence, and of men who are no longer under military control. It is defective, also, in that it makes no appropriation out of which payment can be made, and directs that payment shall be made by an official who is not a disbursing officer of the Government, and who has no funds at his disposal. It is suggested, therefore, that the bill should be amended in these respects, and I transmit herewith a draft of a bill which will, if enacted into a law, accomplish all that is desired in this case.

Very respectful

F. C. AINSWORTH, Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Mr. STEELE. I think we ought to hear the report. I reserve the right to object. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Interior all seem to be concerned in this matter.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The report was read.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6143) for the relief of Peter Young. The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. TRACEY) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Tracey) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6143) for the relief of Peter Young, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report as follows:

Peter Young was enrolled to serve as a private in Company B of the Thirteenth Regiment of Missouri Volunteers on the 13th day of June, 1861, to serve three years. He was captured and paroled at Lexington, Mo., on the 20th day of September, 1861.

On February 24, 1862, he enlisted to serve in the war as a private in Company K, of the Fifth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and was mustered into service May 12, 1862.

It is difficult to see how the charge of desertion ever came to be made against Young. There is no testimony showing that he was ever released from the parole given him by General Price at Lexington.

All the reports—company and regimental—report him as a paroled prisoner, and that for January and February, 1863, shows him present, with the remark, "At St. Louis to be exchanged." The regimental returns for April and May, 1863, show him absent at Benton Barracks, a "paroled prisoner." The company muster roll for May and June, 1863, shows him present.

The prisoners of war records at Benton Barracks show him present to January 29, 1863, when the remark appears opposite his name, "Sent to Lieutenant Gusson, commanding stragglers' camp."

Colonel Pennick, commanding the Fifth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, testifies that a careful reexamination of all retained copies of monthly reports and private memoranda as colonel of said regiment considered or marked as a deserter, and that at the time said regiment was discharged he was in good standing as a member of Company K and entitled, with the other members of said company and regiment, to an honorable discharge. His absence at any and all times was owing to the fact that he was a paroled prisoner of war, and if he was exchanged at any time prior to the muster out of the regiment, he, as commanding officer of said regiment, had exchange or order, nor does no believe that Today was the exchange.

Your committee submit, in view of the testimony, that Peter Young was not a deserter, and the bill is therefore reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments:

In line 3, after the word "authorized," add the words "and directed."

After the word "desertion," in the last line, add the following words: "and grant him an honorable discharge as of the date when his regiment, the Fifth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, was mustered out of service.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CROWTHER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JACOB SCOTT.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4360) for the relief of Jacob Scott.

The bill was read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us hear the report in this case or let some explanation be made.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think the reading of the report will sufficiently explain the bill.

The report was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? Mr. STEELE. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Burton] whether there is anything in this report showing that this matter has ever gone before the War Department?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. I think not.

Mr. STEELE. Then I object.

A. A. HOSMER.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of A. A. Hosmer. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue to Addison A. Hosmer a certificate of location in place of certificate No. K.9, issued in pursuance of the acts of Congress approved June 22, 1800, March 2, 1807, and June 10, 1872, upon proof of ownership and loss of the same, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, and the execution of a bond, with good and sufficient sureties, in double the market value of the certificate so to be issued, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, conditioned to indemnify the United States against the presentation by an innocent holder of the alleged lost certificate. And the certificate of location so to be issued shall have all the legal force and effect as had the original one, No. K 9.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will state in brief that the bill simply authorizes the issuing of a duplicate certificate of location (the original having been lost), upon proof of ownership and the filing of a bond to indemnify the Government against all loss.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CURTIS P. WISE.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4223) for the relief of Curtis P. Wise.

Wise, late a member of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment of Illnois Volunteer Infantry, any charge of desertion that may exist against him, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add the words "to date March 31, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall become due and payable by virtue of this act."

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

VETO MESSAGE-LYDIA A. TAFT.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft, with the veto message of the President, for immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inform the House that President, for immediate action.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inform the House that the bill now presented is a bill which has been vetoed by the President. The Clerk will read the bill, and the question will then be taken, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been referred to the committee, or does it stand on the veto as presented?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is on a report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act of June 27, 1890, the name of Lydia A. Taft, as the widow of Lowell Taft, late a private in Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker— Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the veto message of the President be read as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. POOLE. I do.

The SPEAKER. The veto message of the President will be read as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia. The veto message is as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 577, entitled "An act granting a pension to Lydia A. Tatt."

In 1835 the beneficiary named in this bill became the wife of Lowell Taft, who afterwards enlisted in the Union Army as a private in a Connecticut regiment, and served from August. 1822, until June, 1865. The records of the War Department show that he was captured by the enemy June 15, 1863, and paroled July 14, 1863.

No application for a pension was ever made by him, though he lived until 1891, when he died at a soldiers' home in Connecticut.

No suggestion is made that he incurred any disability in the service, or that his death was in any manner related to such service.

In 1882, nearly twenty-four years after her marriage to the soldier and seventeen years after his discharge from the Army, the beneficiary obtained a divorce from him upon the grounds of his habitual drunkenness and failure to afford her a support.

It is now proposed, five years after the soldier's death, to pension as his widow the wife who was divorced from him at her own instance fourteen years ago.

A government's generous care for widows deprived of a husband's support and companionship by the casualties or disabilities of war rests upon grounds which all must cheerfully approve; but it is difficult to place upon these grounds the case of this proposed beneficiary, who has renounced a wife's relation, with all its duties and all its rights, and who by her own act placed herself beyond the possibility of becoming the widow of her soldier husband. If, as stated in the report of the House committee on this bill, the beneficiary, for some reason, contributed something toward the soldier's support after her divorce and paid the expense of his burial, the fact still remains that this soldier died in a soldiers' home wifeless and leaving no one surviving who, claiming to be his widow, should be allowed to profit by his death.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 20, 1896.

Mr. POOLE. I now ask for the reading of the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. POOLE. I will.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in matters of this kind I have very rarely interfered, and should have said nothing to-day if it had not been that my friend who usually sits in front of me, and who is my guide and mentor in pension cases—I mean the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Erdman]—is absent.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact recited in the President's veto, and not contradicted in the report of the committee, that this woman had cast off her husband on account of his uselessness to her, and from him had obtained a divorce. It also appears that he died in a soldiers' home.

I submit, sir, whether a woman who has turned against her husband and kindly cast him off on account of his worthlessness ought to ask Congress to compensate her for his loss. [Laughter.] Under the circumstances, it scarcely appears that she can claim that she has been bereaved or damaged by his death.

I therefore feel that even in my position, as one who is under bonds for his good behavior, as it were, in these matters, I can afford to protest against the passage of this bill over the objections of the President.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Speaker, I have said in the report which has been read here about all that I care to say upon this question. The fact is, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia, that Lydia Taft did obtain a divorce from Lowell Taft. She was his wife before the war. He served nearly four years and gave good service to the country, and no one has obtained a pension on his account. She is now old, nearly 60 years of age, absolutely destitute, and asks Congress to relieve her to the extent of what she would have been entitled under the act of 1890, as the report states, had she remained his wife up to the time of his death.

It is true that she became compelled in order to save her life from his brutality to seek the protection of the laws of the State of Connecticut and obtain a divorce. No one can blame her for that. She, however, had an affection for that man that he did not fully deserve, and ever afterwards while he lived she did what she could toward clothing him, and finally, when he was cast off by all his own family and his friends and became an inmate of the Soldiers' Home of that State, she even then looked after his clothing, and when he died she brought his body home and gave it burial.

when he died she brought his body home and gave it burial.

Now, it seems to me that she is entitled, in equity, if not in law, to the same protection from the Government that she would have received had she remained his wife up to the time of his death, and that is all this bill asks. This does not establish a precedent. That has been established by acts of Congress years and years ago, and, as shown in this report, President Cleveland has signed will be of this character during this and his former term of office. bills of this character during this and his former term of office.

This is not a new thing for us to do. It is simply giving her the $8 a month that she is entitled to in equity.

Mr. FOOTE. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York is he not, under a legal fiction, trying to establish the fact that drunkenness incurred in the Army is a disability acquired in the service, and therefore should be pensioned, and is not that a bad precedent?

Mr. POOLE. No: it was a misfortune that this man came home as he did. He was not entitled to a pension under our laws on account of drunkenness, but he was in one sense a physical wreck. He was absolutely a wreck so far as working was con-

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, this case is one which appeals, I think, to the kindly sentiments of every person who understands it. I have not always favored the granting of the pensions which have been approved by the House, but this is a bill which should receive, I apprehend, the entire concurrence of every person who loves justice. What are the facts? This widow was divorced; but why was she divorced? Not because of any fault on her part, but because her husband became a drunkwidow was divorced; but why was she divorced? Not because of any fault on her part, but because her husband became a drunkard through his service in the Army. He came home and neglected his duties, neglected to care for her, and abused her; abused her so that it was impossible for her to live with him any longer as his wife. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Turner] asks, Are we to compensate her because of the loss of such a man? That is not the whole question. The question is, in part, Shall we compensate her because she lost a good husband on account of his service in the Army, and because she lost companionship and support which would have been hers if it had not been for his service in the Army? We should compensate her, and we should give her in the Army? We should compensate her, and we should give her the pension which the President has vetoed. The fact that she herself lived an upright and honorable life and could not safely live with the man who was her husband only in name, but who had been a true and faithful husband before he went into the had been a true and faithful husband before he went into the Army, is the all-important fact. If no divorce had been obtained, if he had remained true and faithful to all the demands of his married life, and she had become dissolute, the law would have permitted her to come in at his death and get a pension.

In this case the reverse is true. The fault was all his, and none of it was hers, and the mere fact that she protected herself against his daysher bestelf it has all his discrete the fact that she protected herself against his drunken brutality by obtaining a divorce, the fact that she took care of herself as a woman under those circumstances ought not, should not, in my judgment, weigh with this House against granting this pension. We grant pensions here which do not come under the terms of the general law. We grant them freely because of the equity which is in each case. Here is one which is full of equity in its every form and condition. I believe that it does not come with good grace from any of us to say that we will deny this pension to this woman, who did suffer the loss of her husband's companionship during the term he served in the Army, and did submit to the great discomforts which he forced upon her for years after his return home, and who finally incurred the absolute loss of a good husband in consequence of his army service, simply because she did that which every honest, upright woman ought to do, namely, refuse to live with a man who treats

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Was this harm or detriment which she suffered on account of her husband's service in the war incurred in the line of his duty?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It was incurred while he was a soldier, and I think my friend knows that on his side as well as on ours during the late war those disabilities were incurred. They were an incident of the army service.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Would the limitations of your pension laws as to disabilities incurred not in the line of duty include things like this?

sion laws as to disabilities incurred not in the line of duty include things like this?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. They would not, and we are here to pass bills outside of the law, not inside the law, as the gentleman from Georgia well knows. Therefore, because the equity is all on the one side, and justice is all on the same side, we should, in my opinion, pension this woman.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think now, while we propose to do equity by this poor widow, that think now, while we propose to do equity by this poor widow, that it would be more equitable for us to reimburse her for the time after this man came out of the Army, for all the suffering and anguish that he caused her during the exercise of this brutality which he practiced upon her?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I presume she would be con-

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I presume she would be content if she were compensated as this bill now provides; and if the gentleman wishes her to be compensated beyond that, and will introduce a proper bill, we will consider it at the proper time.

Mr. LOUD. That is rather an evasion of the question, Mr.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? And upon that, under the Constitution, the yeas and nays have to be called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 85, not voting 172; as follows:

The fourth paragraph of Rule XV was read, as follows:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall dajourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with. At any time after the roll call has been completed, the Speaker may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Speaker; and if the House adjourns, all proceedings under this section shall be veacated. But this section of the rule shall not apply to the sessions of Friday night, until further order of the House.

During the roll call the following took place:
Several members having responded "Here" or "Present,"
The SPEAKER said: The Chair will state to the House that under this rule, when members are called they are required to vote "yea" or "nay" upon the engrossment and third reading of the pending bill, unless they desire not to vote, in which case they will respond "Present." Thus the roll call will answer the they will respond "Present." Thus the roll call will answer the double purpose of taking a vote on the bill and of showing what members are present. The Chair desires to add also that we are now under a call of the House, so that it is the duty of members who are present to remain until the call and the vote is completed, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is required to keep members here who are present, and also to bring in the absentees.

The roll call was concluded with the result already stated.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired for to-day and can not vote, but I wish to be recorded as present.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that my colleague, Judge Cobb, be excused on account of sickness.

excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Cobb, will be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTON. My colleague, Dr. Avery, is absent on account of sickness; I understand that he has a leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. A quorum having voted, the Sergeant-atArms will cause the doors to be reopened. By the vote just taken the bill has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. Babcock and Mr. Morse addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORSE. I ask that the question be put on the final passage of the bill. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] moves the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will ask whether that cuts off debate entirely? The SPEAKER. It cuts off debate.

Mr. MEREDITH. Does it cut off a motion to commit the bill?
Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to move that this bill be committed to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject, and I would like the privilege of making a statement.

The SPEAKER. Pending a motion for the previous question the gentleman can move to commit or recommit the bill. Wil he state his motion?

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the bill be committed to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORSE. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has called for the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 105, noes 60.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] that the bill be committed to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. On that motion I ask unanimous consent to make a statement not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. MORSE. I object. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. BABCOCK. The House ought to understand this measure before it votes on it.

Mr. MORSE. I have no objection to allowing the gentleman from Wisconsin to make a statement, if I be allowed unanimous consent to make a reply. I do object to an exparte statement.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that each of the two gentlemen—the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. Morse] and also the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. BABCOCK]—be allowed five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be allowed five minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts the same time.

Several Members. Make it ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. It is proposed that each of these gentlemen be allowed ten minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor for ten

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in the first place that this is a measure local entirely to the District of Columbia; that no member of the District Committee or any Commissioner of the District-indeed, no one having jurisdiction over the subjectmatter of this bill—had any knowledge of this legislation until it came up on the floor of the House under the call of committees, when it was called up by the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. I desire to say further that it is impossible to secure a copy of this bill. I have tried at both ends of the Capitol and have copy of this bill. I have tried at both ends of the Capitol and have failed utterly to get single copy of the bill except one, which was handed to me by the Commissioners.

I wish to say further that I submitted this matter day before yesterday to the Commissioners when they were before our committee, and asked for an explanation. They said that they knew nothing whatever about this legislation, and I have here a statement of the Commissioners in which they say: "The Commissioners have the honor to state that they have not heretofore been requested to report upon this bill."

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are many good things in this bill, and many things that are very objectionable. But the fact is that the committee from which this bill emanates has no more authority to bring before the House legislation of this kind than they ity to bring before the House legislation of this kind than they have to present legislation for the great State of New York. cifically the rules determine what committee shall handle bills of this kind, and had I been present at the time this bill was called up I should have made a point of order and asked that the bill be referred to the proper committee.

The bill is too long for me to go through it section by section in the little time that I now have. But I will say that one of the most objectionable sections of the bill is the one thoroughly dismost objectionable sections of the bill is the one thoroughly discussed on this floor two years ago. At that time a large majority of the House decided against the very section which it is sought now to enact. I refer to the 400-foot clause. As was at that time shown on the floor of the House, priority is now recognized in granting licenses. There are parties owning hotels or running restaurants or saloons whose franchise alone is worth a fortune. There are places where parties have spent almost their whole lives in one instance more than thirty years—in building up a business in which they have now invested all their means.

Under the provisions of this bill a schoolhouse can be built within 400 feet of property which has acquired a vested interest, or a church can be built, and the owner of the property at once driven from the location and his business utterly ruined. The House decided two years ago that it would recognize priority in such matters. It provided that no saloon should be hereafter established within 400 feet of any church or schoolhouse already in existence. That was practically the unanimous opinion of the House and the Senate, and I have seen no reason whatever for changing it since that time.

Another provision embraced in this 400-foot clause is worthy of consideration. The law provides that the 400 feet shall be measured by the nearest track or path of ordinary travel. This measured by the nearest track or path of ordinary travel. This bill does away with that provision, and you can measure directly through the block or square, and in that way reduce the distance and bring the saloon within the 400-foot limit. For instance, a hotel may be located, we will say, on the east side of a block, and directly across the block, on the west side, a school may be established. Measured through the block the distance between them probably would be only 200 feet, although by the ordinary course of travel the distance would be 500 feet or more. This bill would close up many hotels and many business places of that character that are now in existence and that are in no way objectionable to the residents in the neighborhood. the residents in the neighborhood.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do I understand the gentleman's contention to be that the saloon should have the vested and prior right as against the church or schoolhouse?

Mr. BABCOCK. No, sir; that is not my contention. My contention is that the House has already voted—two years ago—that the people living there and doing business in this manner had a vested right in the property, and that no such legislation should be enacted as would practically confiscate the property, so far as these parties are concerned by a newly built church or school. these parties are concerned, by a newly built church or school-house. It did provide that no saloon should hereafter be estab-lished within 400 feet of any church or schoolhouse then in existence.

Mr. KIEFER. When newly established.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). When newly established.

My motion is that this matter be committed to the Committee on the District of Columbia to investigate the questions involved, and that some hearings may be had on it, and that it may be discussed and considered section by section. As I have stated before, it is the only committee of the House having jurisdiction of the subject-matter involved, and I hope that the House will not act upon so important a matter without having it first duly considered by the only committee having proper jurisdiction of it.

by the only committee having proper jurisdiction of it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Wisconsin will kindly turn to the bill in question, he will see that both sections to which he objects have been stricken from the original bill by the committee reporting the bill. That seems to answer his objection pretty well. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to say to the House that for one I am pained, as are the temperance and Christian people of this city, and have been pained during my service of eight years upon this floor, to witness the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, toward the saloons, billiard rooms, and various other agencies and things affecting the morals of the people of this city.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. MORSE. I decline to be interrupted.

Since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor, I repeat, I have been pained at the attitude of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin in regard to all matters affecting the moral interests of the District, and this very question among them.

He says that this action of the committee in reporting the bill was done in secret and in the corner. I beg to state to this House that the bill, if I am not mistaken greatly in my recollection of the matter, was printed both in the Star and the Post of this city within a year, and undoubtedly was largely discussed by the people of the District.

This bill originated with the Anti-Saloon League of the District, and I am here to say that one of the Commissioners of the District, Mr. Truesdell, was present at a large mass meeting held here a few nights ago, and in the very warmest terms commended the action of this organization for the enforcement of law in the District. I claim, therefore, that by inference he commended this bill, because, as I have said, it originated with the Anti-Saloon League, and he must have been familiar with its provisions, because it has been published in the newspapers of the District.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me an inter-

Mr. MORSE. I decline to be interrupted, Mr. Speaker. is an important question, and I have only ten minutes.

Now, so much for its being done in a corner. It has not been done in a corner. It is well known to all the people who are interested in the affairs of this District and who desire its best interests. Now let me occupy just a moment in stating the provisions of this The amendment to section 1 of the present license law of the District of Columbia as proposed in the pending bill enforces the law on brewers and distillers and their agents, who, through an inadvertence, undoubtedly, in framing the present law, can sell without a license, as pointed out by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. District of Columbia.

I had read from the Clerk's desk, on the occasion of the former debate, the recommendation of the Commissioners in this regard. The gentleman from Wisconsin says the Commissioners did not know anything about any provisions of this bill.

The amendment to section 2 changes the law as follows:

At present the excise board has final jurisdiction and interpretation of the

The amendment does not interfere with their findings as to facts,

The amendment does not interfere with their findings as to facts, but provides that questions of law may be appealed to the supreme court of the District, either by the applicant or contestant of record. The "contestant of record" is a man who has entered a formal or written protest to the excise board. It is claimed the excise board has interpreted the law unfairly.

The amendment to section 5 provides for securing consent before a saloon can be established by a party on a corner of the real estate owners diagonally opposite; also provides for written signature annually of abutters. The present law requires only one consent of the abutters to the establishment of a saloon, and that consent may last to the resurrection. The original owners consenting to the establishment of the saloon may have moved away. They may have died or committed suicide, as is the case in one instance, and yet the original consent holds good until the crack instance, and yet the original consent holds good until the crack of doom, in spite of the views or wishes of the present owners of the abutting real estate. Is not that a sensible change? The consent of abutters certainly should be had yearly before a renewal of license.

The amendment to section 6 makes the provisions of this section clear and removes unnecessary words, i. e., "above 16 years of age." As they stand in the law they are nonsense there and have no bearing on the section. Section 6 also takes down the screens, so police officers can look in and see what is going on in the bar or saloon.

Amendment to section 8 defines a barroom and fills a gap, and says that a place where they sell less than a pint, drank on the premises or not, shall take out a license. As it is now, a man can go into a certain class of places and buy a half pint and go out and drink it on the sidewalk, and it does not require any license to sell in that way.

The present law prohibits the licensing of a twice-convicted The present law prohibits the licensing of a twice-convicted licensee, but he can get a license at the same place for a friend, wife, or relative, and the business suffers no interruption in consequence of the revocation of the license. The amendment to section 13 provides that after a second conviction that place shall not be licensed by anyone, and that he or his representative shall not be licensed anywhere. Is not that a reasonable provision?

Under section 14 of the existing law witnesses may be intimidated for fear of incriminating themselves. The amendment to this section is to remove intimidation and to exempt witnesses from prosecution.

Section 15 provides for prosecutions on evidence satisfactory to the district attorney. Under the existing law he is made the judge and jury. The amendment provides for bringing prosecutions by the district attorney on the sworn information of two witnesses, citizens of the District of Columbia.

Section 19 of the existing law prohibits a woman under 16, or a minor under 16, or a criminal from tending bar. But a woman or a minor over 16 may tend bar. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] desire women to tend bars in this city?

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman know of any such thing in the city of Washington? Did he ever hear of any such thing in this city?

this city?

Mr. MORSE. The Anti-Saloon League says there are such instances in this city, and it is composed of honorable and upright

Now, I say if these amendments to existing law shall be adopted, the license law of the District of Columbia will then be far less stringent than the law of the State of New York, and of many other States. There is nothing drastic or radical about these amendments, and they ought to receive the support of every right-minded person who desires the enforcement of the existing right-minded person who desires the enforcement of the existing law.

The bill, as before stated, was drafted by the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia, to cure alarming defects in the existing law as developed in their efforts to enforce the law.

Now, if I have any time remaining I will yield it to the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. DANIELS.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I have very little to say in reference to this bill, because I think the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] very ably cover the amendments proposed in it. All that was attempted in the amendments proposed by the bill was to remedy what appeared to be practical defects in the law now existing, in order to meet what appeared defects in the law now existing, in order to meet what appeared to be the expectations of Congress in its enactment. It is simply to meet the emergencies and defects in the law as previously enacted. It attempts nothing more than simply to carry into effect the general provisions of that law. It was not the purpose of the committee or of this bill—

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think, under the order of the House, two gentlemen were permitted to occupy ten minutes each, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. BABCOCK] and the chairman of the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic [Mr. Morse]. I do not know that they had the privilege of yielding any time to anybody else. I have asked that privilege, and it has not been granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the order, that there was no right to yield. If the gentleman makes that point, the Chair will sustain it.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the point of order was made. I would very much have liked to hear the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Daniels]. I think if this House needed any proof that this bill ought not to pass in its present condition, the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts have furnished it. In this bill there are some twenty amendments to the existing excise laws. I state this proposition boldly, that in the city of Washington we have the best-regulated saloons, the best laws governing the closing of saloons and the admission of minors, and there has come under my own personal observation. best laws governing the closing of saloons and the admission of minors, and there has come under my own personal observation, Mr. Speaker, more than a dozen cases where policemen have been discharged for simply going into saloons unless called in to quell a disturbance.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts speaks of the necessity for the property owners signing every year. Under the present law, Mr. Speaker, the objection of one single property owner to the establishment of a saloon is sufficient to oblige that man to furnish a new petition of a majority of the freeholders adjacent to his place of business. I ask, under that state of circumstances, where is the necessity of signing every year, when a single property owner can close up any saloon by his power of making complaint?

plaint?

plaint?
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. What objection have you to the removal of screens from saloons, so that people passing the bar can see who are there who have a right to be there and others who wight not to be there?

ought not to be there?

Mr. BABCOCK. I said, Mr. Speaker, that there were some good provisions in this bill, some that I would be very glad to good provisions in this bill, some that I would be very glad to support, and I see no objection at all to that. I would vote for a proposition of that kind myself. But here we have a long bill and not a single copy of it or of the report on it can be had.

Mr. MEREDITH. I can not get one.

Mr. MAHANY. Nor can I.

Mr. BABCOCK. More than twenty members around me have asked for a copy of the bill.

Mr. DANIELS. If I can interrupt the gentleman for a moment, I will state that this bill was printed last session, and I have a copy that I got in the ordinary way last session.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman says I could have gotten a copy last session. I have always made it a point to furnish bills and reports of all measures that I have called up in the House, so that the House might vote intelligently upon those propositions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

a question? Mr. BABCOCK.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to ask whether the gentleman from Wisconsin knows whether the other side has been heard on this measure?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Committee on the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the attorney for the District have no knowledge whatever of any hearings on this measure, and have had no knowledge of the bill being called up and pending before Congress. The gentleman says the bill was printed over a year ago. That may be true, but at the same time it is invessible to get a convention of the report of the bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. I appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the good sense and judgment of this House to send the bill where it can properly be judgment of this House to send the bill where it can properly be discussed and reported back.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.
Mr. MORSE. I will state in that minute, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Wisconsin has said we have the best license system in regard to closing saloons. I have a letter from a person who signs herself "A Suffering Wife," who states that the gin mills under the existing law are open nearly all night. I ask unanimous consent that I may have this letter read at the Clerk's

A MEMBER. I obj. Mr. MEREDITH. I object.
ITH. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.
Mr. MEREDITH. Will you take testimony of that kind?
Mr. MORSE. I will, from the tone of this letter.
Mr. MEREDITH. It was upon such testimony as that your ancestors burned women for witchcraft in your State. [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee or the District of Columbia.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 3400) granting an increase of pension to John A. Worswick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 173) to permit railroads in the District to occupy additional parts of streets to accommodate the traveling public attending the inaugural ceremonies; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. trict of Columbia.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R-174) to suspend the operation of an act approved February 13, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes, approved June 16, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PRINTING OF A PAPER ON THE SENATE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for an order that a paper on the Senate published in the Youth's Companion of November 13, 1890, and quoted in my speech in the Senate in January, 1892, be printed as a document. It will cost only a few dollars, and it is a very excellent article. I hope it may be printed for the use of the Senate. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the order in writing?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I have not written the order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missourt asks that a certain paper of which he informs the Senate may be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

USE OF MONEY IN ELECTIONS.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read. The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be elected by the Senate to constitute a committee on the use of money in elections, and that said committee be instructed to thoroughly investigate the extent to which money, if any, was used in connection with the recent Presidential election, either in promoting the nominations or in influencing in any manner the choice of Presidential electors, and to inquire whether or not any such expenditures were excessive, illegitimate, corrupt, or unlawful, and especially to inquire and ascertain to what extent for such purposes the owners of silver mines, gold mines, the bankers, the manufacturers, the railroads, or other corporations and millionaires of all classes made contributions, and what contributions, if any, were made by persons and corporations residing abroad, and to report to the Senate all the facts, and whether or not, in the opinion of the committee, any legislation by Congress is expedient and necessary to lessen or prevent the use of money in elections. Said committee shall have power to acb by full or sub committees, to send for persons and papers, and sit during the present session of Congress and until the first Monday of December, A. D. 1897, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the law the resolution

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the law the resolution will go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the resolution is referred, I desire the indulgence of the Senate just a moment to have two articles read showing the necessity for the passage of the resolution. I will occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment. I send to the desk and ask to have read an editorial from the New York Tribune of December 11, 1896.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the paper at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE SILVER OUTBREAK.

Senator Allen and the bolters who have practically annexed themselves to the Populists are doing a public service unintentionally. Their attempt to revive agitation and uncertainty on the question of money is heartily condemned by business men of all shades of opinion, and its injurious influences on industry are resented by workingmen. The right of these people to demand a popular decision on the question was not denied. But their attempt to keep the whole country in the slough of despond for an indefinite time because the popular decision was against them, and by a factious resistance to that decision, is rightly considered indecent and in its purpose revolutionary. The country will presently be prepared to resist it with the same grand union of loyal feeling which crushed the attempt of Altgeld & Co. to promote free ricting.

Loyalty in this country means obedience to the legal decisions of the nation, the source of all authority. The man who is beaten after a fair hearing is not bound to abandon his opinion. He is at liberty to strive to the utmost to convince men so that a future decision may be in his favor. But he is bound, if he has any sense of loyalty, to respect the verdict of the people until a new one has been rendered. Anything like factious opposition to such a decision is dishonorable, and is certain to arouse a popular resentment which will go very far toward deciding future contests. But when the solvency and the honor of the nation are at stake, and in purely factious opposition to measures for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measures for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measures for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measures for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measures for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measure for the maintenance of public honor a man imperiliation to measure for the saf

Mr. ALLEN. I ask also to have read an article that is marked, from the Farm, Field, and Fireside, published at Chicago, dated December 5, 1896.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. ALLEN. The article is short.

The Secretary read as follows:

The vote of Illinois was nearly 250,000 in excess of the vote of 1892; that of Ohio 200,000, and of Kentucky 100,000. From whence have these States gained so largely in population during four years?

At the same time Kansas, a growing Western State, only shows 10,000 gain. The great State of Texas, which has been a theater of immigration, only shows 40,000 gain; Alabama shows 5,000 loss; New York only shows 40,000 gain: Arkansas, a State to which immigration has been directed, only gained 1,000, while Indiana, a pivotal State, shows 90,000 gain.

These figures are inexplicable. Why have the pivotal States made such tremendous gains in voting strength? Is it legitimate, or has there been some new secret—fraudulent—device for making and swelling majorities where they a

THE WATER HYACINTH.

Mr. PASCO. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be now

The resolution was read, as follows;

The resolution was read, as follows;

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate any information of a recent date upon the files of the Department relating to the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida or the other South Atlantic or Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water byacinth, and to inform the Senate whether any efforts have been made to remove such obstruction to commerce and with what results, and whether in his judgment any additional legislation is desirable to provide against the closing of any such navigable waters by the continued growth and spreading of such plant.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have an amendment upon this subject to offer to the proper appropriation bill, of which I desire to give notice.

The waters of the St. Johns River is my own immediate region in Florida—my own home. They embrace the only portion of the State which is infected by this very destructive growth. It almost destroys the navigation of the great St. Johns River, which is in part an estuary of the sea, opens the larger part of the interior of south Florida to navigation, and making accessible the production of phosphates and the tropical fruits, vegetables, and lumber of that country. This is a subject of very great importance, as this growth, imported from a foreign country and transplanted in the waters of the St. Johns, threatens to almost entirely close the river for navigation.

I hope that the resolution will be passed, and at a later day, when the subject shall come before the Senate, I give notice that I shall ask for a considerable appropriation for the improvement of that river, to prevent it from being entirely closed. Captain Shaw, an experienced and capable navigator of many years on the river, is now gathering the information necessary for Congress, and I am only awaiting its receipt to urge Congress to appropriate the

Mr. PASCO. It is with a view of getting information before the Senate for intelligent action that I introduced the resolution. There is some such information at the War Department. I desire to get it in an official form, so that we may make some effort to remove this obstruction to navigation and commerce.

I understand that this obstruction exists not only in the State which my colleague and I represent, but in some of the other South Atlantic and Gulf States, particularly in the State of Louisiana. I have consulted with the Senators from that State and isiana. I have consulted with the Senators from that State and learn that some of their navigable waters have been obstructed by the continuous growth of this water hyacinth, which is a very beautiful aquatic plant, but it is practically shutting up the mouths of some important navigable streams in these States.

It was for the purpose of getting this information that the resolution was prepared and introduced.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.
The resolution was read, as follows:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it was provided in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," passed by Congress June 3, 1896, as follows:

"Improving Yaquina Bay, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $25,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project as recommended by the Board of Officers of the Engineer Corps October 11, 1895, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, exclusive of amount herein and heretofore appropriated."

Also, "improving Willamette and Yamhill rivers, Oregon, $40,000, to be expended in accordance with report submitted February 21, 1896, for Willamette River from Portland to Eugene, and in accordance with report of survey, dated March 6, 1895, for lock and dam on Yamhill River: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvements, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000, including the amount herein appropriated: And provided further. That the sum of $19,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be available for the purchase or construction of a snag boat with suitable appliances: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, use so much of the money herein appropriated as may be necessary to prevent the erosion of the west bank of the Willamette River opposite Salem, Oreg.. and to maintain the river channel at that point: "Therefore Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate at his earliest convenience as to what steps, if any, have been taken looking to the placing of sai

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read..

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read, Mr. Fresident. I should like to know what it is. Its reading was not heard on this side.
Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state to the Senator from Maryland what the resolution is. There was provision in the river and harbor act which passed at the last session for the placing under contract of three several proposed improvements in the State of Oregon. This resolution simply calls upon the Secretary of War to advise the Senate as to what steps, if any, have been taken. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the resolution to be again read?

Mr. GORMAN. No. I merely wished to know what it is.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

ISSUE OF BONDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4052) approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico authorizing the issue of certain bonds of said Territory, which came over from the House aday or two since and which was read. the House a day or two since and which was read. An objection was then made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell], who now withdraws his objection, I understand. He has examined the bill. It is identical with the bill which passed both Houses of Congress before the adjournment in June and received the veto of the President because of certain restrictive language at the close of the Fresident because of certain restrictive language at the close of the measure, which has been eliminated from it. With that exception, the bill stands exactly as it did when it passed the two Houses of Congress before. The amendment was read by the Secretary the other day, before the objection was made by the Senator from Missouri, and I should be glad if the Senate would vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the action of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the action of the House of Representatives will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to House bill 462, entitled "A bill approving certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, atheorying the issue of orritain bads of said Territory," numbered a state of the Territory of New Mexico, atheorying the issue of orritain bads of said Territory, and the said of the county of Santa Fe, Territory of New Mexico, dated September 29, 1891, issued under the provisions of an act of the Territorial general assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, entitled "An act for the financial relief of counties and municipalities," approved February 29, 1891.

"Such bonds having been issued in refunding and in lieu of $150,000 of bonds, overdue interest, and a judgment rendered thereon, of said county of Santa Fe, theretofore, in the year 1890, issued and outstanding, are hereby validated, approved, and confirmed. Also the certain bonds and indebtedness, $6,000 in amount, together with the interest coupons thereto attached, of the county of Grant, Territory of New Mexico, dated July 1, 1883, being the unretired part of an issue of $65,000 in bonds issued by said county of Grant under the provisions of an act of the Territorial general assembly dated February 1, 1872, are hereby validated, approved, and confirmed. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask the Senator from Colorado to explain how this change affects the original bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In no way except that it removes a restrictive clause to which the President objects, and which he thought might invalidate the bill invalidate the bill.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House of Representatives has also disagreed to Senate amendment numbered 3.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate recede from that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach. I was not present yesterday when pension bills were considered, and I now ask the immediate consideration of the bill I have named, which was returned to the Senate with the objections of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce that morning business is concluded. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Mr. PALMER. If the bill is now before the Senate, I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. MORGAN. Did I understand the Chair to announce that Mr. MORGAN. Did I understand the Chair to announce that the morning business had been closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so announced.

Mr. MORGAN. I was waiting to get a chance to call up a resolution which comes over from yesterday, which is a part of the morning business, and which I announced on yesterday I should ask the Senate to allow me this morning to make some observations upon. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not insist upon the point that the morning business is closed, for I submit respectfully that that resolution comes over as part of the morning business. business

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Alabama as soon as the bill referred to by the Senator from Illinois shall have been disposed of. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. PALMER from the Committee on Pensions May 9, 1896, but was interrupted by Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is it that is being presented by the Secretary

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Palmer] called up a bill for consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. A vetoed pension bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a bill which has not received the sanction of the President of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does it require unanimous consent to take it up?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does it require unanimous consent to take it up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it does not necessarily, although unanimous consent was asked.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In view of the fact that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] had yesterday given notice that at the conclusion of the morning business this morning he would ask to occupy the attention of the Senate for the purpose of submitting remarks on a resolution of interest to the Senate, I do not think that anything should be interposed in his way.

Mr. PALMER. I certainly did not desire to interfere with the Senator from Alabama; and, with the understanding that the bill to which I have referred can be disposed of after he has concluded his remarks, I will yield to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was partly owing to a mis-understanding on the part of the Chair that the resolution referred to by the Senator from Alabama was not laid before the Senate as morning business. The resolution was submitted yesterday, and at the request of the Senator from Alabama laid upon the table, and therefore did not come into the hands of the presiding officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, by unanimous consent the vetoed pension bill may be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the Senator from Illinois.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the reading of the resolution which I submitted yesterday

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. MORGAN, as follows:

Resolved. That the President is requested, if it is not in his opinion incompatible with the public service, to send to the Senate copies of the papers relating to the condition of affairs in the Island of Cuba, which are referred to in the report of the Secretary of State that accompanies his last annual message as papers collected in the annual volume entitled "Foreign Relations of the United States."

And also a statement of the several amounts of the claims lodged in the Department of State by citizens of the United States against Spain, growing out of the alleged insurrection now existing in the Island of Cuba.

And also all correspondence with the Spanish Government relating to the vessel called the Competitor, and the persons captured with or near that vessel; with a statement of the charges pending in any court in Spain or Cuba against said persons and the proceedings of such court in those cases; and the place of their imprisonment, the character of their treatment while in prison, and the condition of their health; whether said prisoners have had the privilege of counsel of their own selection on any trial that has taken place on such charges, or were represented by any consul, attorney, or other agent of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President in the discussion of the present

Mr. Morgan. Mr. President, in the discussion of the present phase of our relations with Spain and Cuba I will confine my remarks to comments upon the facts stated in the recent annual message of the President and the report of the Secretary of State, to which the President refers as a part of that message.

I am not able to discover that the President has made any specific research and the report of the Secretary of State, to which the President refers as a part of that message.

I am not able to discover that the President has made any specific recommendation or indication as to any action he deems it proper or expedient for Congress to take with reference to Spain or Cuba, nor that he has indicated any course, except a still patient waiting, that the Executive proposes to take. Congress, thus left to its own initiative, must assume its own responsibilities in a matter of the most serious gravity.

Congress must give to the statements of the President unhesitating acceptance as to matters that are committed by the Constitution to his especial charge. When he undertakes to state the facts that affect our relations with other powers we must accept those facts, unless the disproof of them is overpowering. This message, therefore, is of the most impressive importance as a statement of the leading facts and conclusions that bear upon our daties in respect of the sortlist of arms that he a reged for results duties in respect of the conflict of arms that has raged for nearly two years in the Island of Cuba, and it has the support of nearly all American belief. I have not heard that Spain controverts any statement of the President in his message, and I can find no ground for the conjecture that any material issue of fact will be raised as to any important statement the President has made.

The evidence that comes from private sources relating to the condition of Cuba and the horrors of persecution, rapine, and extermination visited upon the people of Cuba admits of no doubt as to its credibility; yet it presents pictures so incredibly inhuman and so disgraceful to the civilization of this age that it stuns the mind into disbelief that such things can be true. But I do not now present such proofs.

Congress is relieved from seeking proofs as to the actual situa-tion in Cuba by the statements of the President's message, upon which, alone, I predicate the judgment I am required to form and to act upon along with other Senators under circumstances of great responsibility and extreme pressure.

No feature of the situation is more trying than that which requires prompt action, if any action is to be taken, to save a country from utter devastation, and many thousands of innocent people, including citizens of the United States, from cruel and deliberate butchery at the hands of the Spaniards.

This situation in Cuba is no surprise to me, nor are the motive and purpose that have driven Spain to wholesale massacre of the Cubans without anticipation on my part or on the part of many who have seen that Spain is compelled for the security of the home Government to abandon her grasp on Cuba. When we were home Government to abandon her grasp on Cuba. When we were forced at the last session of Congress to consider whether our people would tolerate the conditions of the war in Cuba, that violated every principle of humanity and civilized warfare, I then stated that if we listened to the appeals of the Cubans for justice and manifested for them any sympathy or forbearance that Spain would seek occasion to provoke war with the United States in order to salve her wounded pride by a surrender of Cuba to a superior force rather than acknowledge the independence of the native population.

The fierce hand of devastation is now working in Cuba for the purpose of satisfying the Spanish people that their money could be better expended and their lives could be saved with more honor and benefit to Spain than they can be if thrown away in the effort to subjugate a people who can never become honestly loyal to the Crown and a country that is destroyed in its practical value.

If war with the United States is necessary to reconcile the Spanish people to the loss of Cuba by foreign conquest, we shall be compelled to meet that emergency. If the destruction of Cuba is enough to satisfy the popular sentiment of revenge upon the inhabitants, we can avoid a war with Spain by remaining inactive, while our own people are being ruined or slaughtered along with the Cubans.

If we take any action toward stopping this war of annihilation and extermination we have no time to lose.

The President says that both parties in Cuba have adopted and are acting upon the same theory, namely:

That the exigencies of the contest require the wholesale annihilation of property, that it may not prove of use to the enemy. It is to the same end that, in pursuance of general orders, Spanish garrisons are now being withdrawn from plantations and the rural population required to concentrate itself in the towns. The sure result would seem to be that the industrial value of the island is fast diminishing, and that, unless there is a speedy and radical change in existing conditions, it will soon disappear altogether. * * * It is reliably asserted that should these interruptions continue during the current year and practically extend, as is now threatened, to the entire sugar-producing territory of the island, so much time and so much money will be required to restore the land to its normal productiveness that it is extremely doubtful if capital can be induced to even make the attempt.

The crisis of the destruction of the island is imminent, and the duty of saving the country from "complete devastation" is the motive that-will constrain our Government to such action as will subserve the interests thus involved and at the same time promise to Cuba and its inhabitants an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace.

Thus the inciting cause, the motive, and the action that must result are grouped together in the President's message, and Congress should not hesitate to declare that, for the reasons stated in the message of the President, the independence of Cuba is recognized. In the last session Congress adopted the following resolution by votes nearly unanimous in both Houses. I will read that solemn declaration

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

That declaration left the President to his choice whether he would concur in the policy thus announced by Congress. He chose to delay any declaration on his part until facts had more fully developed the purposes of Spain toward Cuba and the ability of the Cubans to defend themselves against the whole power of the Kingdom. The war has continued until it has reached the final and desperate stage of a war of devastation and extermination, in which the people and the fruits of the land are converted into a prey to the commissioned guerrillas, who have abandoned honorable warfare and have become robbers, cutthroats, assassins, ravishers, and pirates. All these crimes will be found to have been authentically stated to our Government when the seals of secrecy are broken and they are brought to the knowledge of the world are broken and they are brought to the knowledge of the world for the vindication of our action, if we are compelled to engage in war to put an end to this saturnalia of blood and fire.

Congress has already the most profound reasons for regretting that our executive department did not act in accordance with the resolution I have read. A firm declaration that the conflict in Cuba had reached the stage of open public war would have admonished Spain that the United States at least would hold her and the Cubans to obedience to the laws of civilized warfare and and the Cubans to obedience to the laws of civilized warfare, and the world would have been spared-the spectacle of the utter ruin of an adjoining country, by nature one of the most charming and fertile in the world.

But our supposed business interests were in the way, and, in the effort to secure their damages and losses, we have permitted Spain, in her despair of reducing the Cubans to submission, to make the war a revel of vengeance and the people of Cuba the victims of every horrid and brutal passion of infuriated men.

As the message of the President is the sole basis of fact on which I rest the conclusions I have reached as to my duty as a Senator na crisis that is forced upon the country because of our just and natural sympathy for the Cubans, and as the laws of nations stand to support those conclusions, as I believe, I will enter upon a more careful statement of those facts as I will quote them from the message, and of those laws as I understand them.

Taken as a whole, the President's message is an affirmative and substantial concurrence in the resolution heretofore adopted by Congress, which I have read, which commits that body to the declaration that public civil war exists in Cuba.

It is that fact, and not its declaration in any selected form of words or by any tribunal, that defines the rights of our citizens residing in Cuba under the laws of nations, by which they are to be ascertained, admeasured, and enforced, in the absence of treaty stipulations. The existence of a state of war is not determined merely by a declaration of its existence, but by the existence of the facts which constitute a state of war under the laws of nations

A citizen of the United States, or of any country, when absent from his own Government, is placed under the protection of the laws of nations, by the common consent of mankind. Such protection often justifies interference in his behalf by powers to which he is an alien and a stranger. In Christian countries this sort of shelter is given to those who are wronged by the local government as a duty to the stranger, thus illustrating the divine benevolence that inspires the Christian creed. This high duty is expressed in the mutual guaranties of the great European powers for the protection of humanity in Turkey, and, in that connection, is reiterated in burning eloquence in the following extracts from the last annual message of President Cleveland:

while none of our citizens in Turkey have thus far been killed or wounded, though often in the midst of dreadful scenes of danger, their safety in the future is by no means assured. Our Government at home and our minister at Constantinople have left nothing undone to protect our missionaries in Ottoman territory, who constitute nearly all the individuals residing there who have a right to claim our protection on the score of American citizenship. Our efforts in this direction will not be relaxed; but the deep feeling and sympathy that have been aroused among our people ought not to so far blind their reason and judgment as to lead them to demand impossible things. The outbreaks of blind fury which lead to murder and pillage in Turkey occur suddenly and without notice, and an attempt on our part to force such a hostile presence there as might be effective for prevention or protection would not only be resisted by the Ottoman Government, but would be regarded as an interruption of their plans by the great nations who assert their exclusive right to intervene in their own time and method for the security of life and property in Turkey.

I do not believe that the present somber prospect in Turkey will be long permitted to offend the sight of Christendom. It so mars the humane and enlightened civilization that belongs to the close of the nineteenth century that it seems hardly possible that the earnest demand of good people throughout the Christian world for its corrective treatment will remain unanswered.

The commander of an American warship lying in a port of Turkey who would refuse to protect with his guns the people of any country who were being massacred as were the Christians in Harpoot and Marash would be disgraced in the estimation of every American citizen and would deserve to be dismissed from the Navy.

The laws of nations follow a citizen of the United States into

The laws of nations follow a citizen of the United States into places where the laws of the United States have no local recognition and where its flag has no influence. They give him the right to recognize a government de facto, for his protection and for the regulation of his conduct, and justify his obedience to "the powers that be," even when the de facto existence of that government is denied by the titular sovereign of the country and that sovereign is supported in such denial by the silence or the indifference of the United States. I could go still further in the statement of the rights of an American citizen who is found in Cuba, in time of insurrection, but that is unnecessary for the purposes in time of insurrection, but that is unnecessary for the purposes of this argument. What I now assert is that our people in Cuba of this argument. What I now assert is that our people in Cuba have rights under the laws of nations that the courts of all neutral countries and of our own country will protect and enforce, despite the opposition even of the President of the United States, if he should oppose them.

if he should oppose them.

These laws are silent in Cuba, so far as any attention to them is given by our Government, either in behalf of the people of other countries or our own. What I feel bound and authorized to do, though it is not all that I would like to do, is to give to the laws of nations full scope and enforcement in Cuba in behalf of our own people. If the Island of Cuba is still at peace, and is not enveloped in war, in the contemplation of the laws of nations, as peace and war are defined by those laws, our people there must look first to the protection of Spain for safety and for the redress of the wrongs they are suffering.

If public war prevails in Cuba, by whatever name Spain may choose to call such hostilities, our people there have all the rights and immunities that the laws of nations give to neutrals in time of war, and they have the right to obey and even to assist in the support of the armies that, for the time being, have the power to command and enforce their submission. When our Government gets its consent to enforce these rights of our people in Cuba which are supported by the laws of nations, it must do so either by recogare supported by the laws of nations, it must do so either by recognizing the existence of war and by holding each party engaged in war to its responsibility for wrongs done to our people through its conduct or by still recognizing the existence of a state of peace in Cuba and demanding of Spain the reparation due for acts of the titular Government and also for the acts of those who are claimed by Spain to be only a warring faction engaged in insurrection.

It is a choice between giving to the lives, liberty, freedom, and property of our people in Cuba the direct and immediate support of our national power, whether it is active or merely moral, or whether it is through diplomacy or arms on the one hand and on the other the passive, dilatory, theoretic method of waiting for a more convenient season for entering suit against Spain for damages through the endless palavers of diplomatic correspondence. We must go ungarned into the ministerial courts, where verbose We must go unarmed into the ministerial courts, where verbose enigmas of speech suspend justice and reason alike, and there create a war of words to settle the controversies that are now arising daily from an unchristian and horrible war of blood, rapine, murder, and cruelty in which our people are innocently involved.

What the rights of our people are pleading, with hot breath and tears of anguish into the dull ears of the Government, whose Executive assumes the mastery over their fate, is that the powers of prevention shall be summarily applied to these abuses, with the quick resistance that responds with sufficient force to the quick and fatal blows that are assailing them.

They are not content to suffer these wrongs, within earshot of our frontier, and to pile up claims, petitions, and proofs to be brought before Spain, in long years of discussion, after she has bankrupted a kingdom to wreak blind revenge on a province.

If Spain is liable to our people, both for her own wrongs and for wrongs done by Cubans, let that liability be met as soon and as often as it arises without delay. The compensation is due on demand, and not at the end of a diplomatic lawsuit, to be commenced, conducted, and ended when it may suit the convenience of Spain.

When we know that wrongs have been done to our people who are innocent sojourners in Cuba, and that other wrongs still more serious will be done them if this war is to continue, our Government is in the most humiliating state of innocuous desuetude if it interposes no helping hand to the sufferers and refuses to forbid the further devastation and death that a cruel Government is now inflicting upon them.

Never in the history of man did a question of money, of dollars and cents, of business interests, stand so squarely against human life and personal safety, or affect a people so seriously, as those baneful influences and deeds of violence are now affecting our people in Cuba.

people in Cuba.

Spain, in the pride of her arrogance and in her contempt for the common people who are her subjects, refuses to acknowledge that they are morally or physically able to wage open war against the Crown, and persists in the declaration that their uprising is only a factious and criminal insurrection. The United States, on the other hand, to fortify her money demand against Spain for injustice. other hand, to fortify her money demand against Spain for injuries suffered by our "business interests" at the hands of the Cubans, winks at the arrogant folly of Spain and joins her in the declaration, which every intelligent man in the world knows to be a travesty of the truth, that there is no war in Cuba.

It makes no difference to us, it seems, if life and liberty are destroyed; each death and each wound increases the damages in money, and Spain is expected to foot the bills. This cent per cent speculation in the horrors and sufferings of warfare is derogatory to every sympathy that any virtuous American ever permitted to find a lodgment in his heart

If the war is to continue in Cuba without our intervention to protect the rights of our people, the money question involved may triumph over the question of life and liberty, but its triumph, long delayed, will destroy its hopes of reward in the bankruptcy of Spain. While the war continues there under our recognition that it is only a civil commotion, we are bound to rely upon the good intentions and the power of Spain to protect our people in Cuba against both the Spaniards and the Cubans. This at best is a very unsafe reliance.

The debt is very doubtful of collection and we are not justifiable in throwing away good lives to increase the volume of a bad debt that our people will probably lose in the outcome.

In my view of the situation, our duty is plain and imperative that we must secure and preserve our people in Cuba against the outrages stated in the message of the President.

In tracing the history of the struggle in Cuba the President goes back twenty-eight years to the rising at Yarra in 1868, "which was followed by an insurrection that lasted for ten years." He asserts that the conduct of Spain in that war tested in a severe manner the patience and forbearance of the Government of the United States, "the most pacific of powers," to such an extent that "no other great power, under circumstances of similar perplexity, would have manifested the same restraint and the same patient endurance."

This open reproach would be extremely unjust and cruel to

This open reproach would be extremely unjust and cruel to Spain if in that ten years of violence she had only been engaged in quelling an insurrection in Cuba that was fomented and carried on for purposes that were base and disloyal and were not justified by the most strenuous demands for redress.

In that connection the President further states that—

Neither the Government nor the people of the United States have shut their eyes to the course of events in Cuba, nor have failed to realize the existence of conceded grievances which have led to the present revolt from the authority of Spain—grievances recognized by the Queen Regent and by the Cortes, voiced by the most enlightened of Spanish statesmen, without regard to party, and demonstrated by reforms proposed by the executive and approved by the legislative branch of the Spanish Government.

Thus, the President connects the two Cuban wars by asserting the continuance of the same grievances for a period that is longer than a third of this century, and contended against by constant resistance to wrong.

The whole world agrees with the President that this is a struggle for liberty demanded by a distinct people, who have long been held in a bondage to a foreign power that has forced them, by grievances that can not be endured, to sacrifice everything in a just cause, and he has, in kindness, tendered our good offices to bring it to a close.

The President further concludes, justly, that the dimensions of the war and its destructive character have rapidly increased, and are far beyond those of the first revolution of 1868 to 1878.

He says:

If the determination of Spain to put down the insurrection seems but to strengthen with the lapse of time, and is evinced by her unhesitating devotion of largely increased military and naval forces to the task, there is much reason to believe that the insurgents have gained in point of numbers and character and resources, and are none the less inflexible in their resolve not to succumb without practically securing the great objects for which they took up arms. * * * If Spain has not yet reestablished her authority, neither have the insurgents yet made good their title to be regarded as an independent State.

It is the independence of Cuba and not her belligerent rights that he thinks important. No intelligent person can read the President's account of these hostilities, their character and progress, without concluding at once that war is open, flagrant, and desperate between the native Cuban's and the foreign Spaniards in the Island of Cuba, and requires no act of recognition to make it a public war. Nor can anyone escape the conclusion from what the President states, that, unless Spain concedes to Cuba the rights of an independent state and withdraws from the conflict, or is driven from the island, the virtual extermination of the native population is to be the fatal doom of Cuba. It is a marked feature of the message of the President that he assumes that the issue, as it is now presented, between Cuba and Spain is either independence or extermination.

The President evidently regards the insurrection in Cuba as having advanced to the stage of open public war, so far, indeed, as to dispense with the necessity of according belligerent rights "to the insurgents." He says that the proposition is "no longer urged (he does not say by whom) because untimely." He assumes in this statement the existence of a fact that contradicts the records of Congress if he means to say that Congress has abandoned its But he says that belligerent rights to the people of Cuba are "untimely." If such rights are untimely, it must be because it is either too soon or too late to accord them, and he fails to state upon which horn of the dilemma he would have us lay our hands. If it is too late, it is because he is about to determine that we, as a people, under his lead, intend to free Cuba from Spanish sova people, under his lead, intend to free Cuba from Spanish sovereignty, and will do it quickly, or because he is convinced that the arms of Cuba will prevail over those of Spain at an early day, in either of which events belligerent rights would be of no service to the Cubans, and would possibly be "untimely." I will not pause now to attempt to undo this puzzle. The President thus admits the right of the Cubans to recognition as lawful beligerents but refuse to great it because it is the president. ligerents, but refuses to grant it because it is, "in practical operation, clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests."

It is not because of the fact that the conflict of arms in Cuba is a mere insurrection that the President claims that it is "untimely and in practical operation clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests" to acknowledge that they are entitled to belligerent rights. If it is only an insurrection, the concession of such rights would violate the laws of nations. If it is a war, justice demands that we should recognize its existence and the rights that attend it, and the President has no authority to say for the American people that they no longer urge that belligerent rights shall be accorded to Cubans, because such a high national duty is "clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests.'

No one can afford to do the President the injustice of saying that he attributes to the Cubans the vile attribute of merely facthat he attributes to the Cutains the vine attribute of inferry fac-tious rebellion or insurrection. He speaks of them as a people who have earnest longings for liberty and the resolution to perish in the effort to gain independence. No one can misunderstand the pure and elevated motives of the American people in the exhibition of their sympathy for the Cuban patriots. It is treason to truth and justice to impute any selfish motive to the American people in their feelings or their conduct toward the people of Cuba. It is an insult to tell them that it is perilous and injurious to their interests to ask their Government to apply to the Cubans the benefit of the laws of nations, so that in fighting for their liberty and independence they should not fight as outlaws, with halters about their necks.

The peril to "our own interests" that is at the bottom of this statement must be the danger that some of our people at home may lose money if the Republic insists that the spirit of liberty shall not be suppressed in the souls of men who aspire to the bles ings we enjoy. It is money against humanity, pelf against jus-

It is money against humanty, par against fus-tice, riches against liberty.

It is "untimely" that our own people and the natives who in-habit Cuba should have the benefit of our honest statement that war exists there, so that they may escape the laws that condemn them to death or imprisonment for life for offenses that are venial under the laws of war; only because it is untimely to make any declaration that might weaken the security of our "business interests" for the bill of damages that we are piling up against Spain. We—

Crook the pregnant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning.

Although I believe that the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cubans would lead directly to the relief of our people in Cuba, and would soon result in Cuban independence, inasmuch as the President seems to prefer a more coercive policy and warns Spain that the time is near at hand for decisive action, I will support him in any movement that will save our people on that island from further outrage and give a real "promise to Cuba and its inhabitants of an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace." of peace.'

I will not obstruct his course with questions of propriety under the laws of nations as to belligerent rights, but will follow the colors when planted by the President on the advanced ground that the concession of belligerent rights has become "untimely" and that our duty now demands active intervention.

If that ground crumbles away, I will again fall back to the position that a just care for our own people requires us to declare an armed neutrality, ready to assail either beligerent that inflicts wrongs on our people. Assuming that the subjunctive conditions and "ifs" have disappeared, or will soon vanish, and that we are lifted above the low plane of subterfuges, I will now undertake to justify this threatened advance to the high ground of national duty which the President is contemplating as being near at hand. If he should say that the time has arrived, "the hour has truck" would be a provided that the state of the should say that the state of the should say that the state of the same struck.

the should say that the time has arrived, "the hour has struck," would any American be so base as not to hold up his hands while the battle is raging?

If he shall, indeed, execute the will of the people and the demands of humanity, let us prepare to sustain him by justifying his action with reference to the declarations of the great statesmen and publicists whose teachings are a guide for nations that never leads to dishonor.

The President having justly stated that this "insurrection," as he calls it, is for the redress of grievances of long standing and acknowledged injustice and severity, that have been the cause of two great conflicts of arms, one lasting for ten years and the other to last indefinitely; that it has spread until the Cubans dominate two-thirds of the Island of Cuba, confining the Spaniards to the seaports and larger towns; that it employs the Spaniarh navy and "vast bodies of men sent across thousands of miles of occars" "vast bodies of men sent across thousands of miles of ocean;" that it has already cost Spain "an enormous debt;" that it presents "the spectacle of the utter ruin of a country, by nature one of the most charming and fertile in the world;" that "the passions of the combatants grow more and more inflamed, and excesses on both sides become more frequent and more deplorable;" that "the original policy of the Spanish Government" has been apparently abandoned and it "is now acting upon the same theory as the insurgents, namely, that the exigencies of the contest require the wholesale annihilation of property, that it may not prove of use and advantage to the enemy;" that "Spanish garrisons are now being withdrawn from plantations and the rural population required to concentrate itself in the towns;" and that "the industrial value of the island is fast diminishing;" and that "unless there is a speedy and radical change in existing conditions, it will soon disappear altogether." It is a matter of surprise that the President should hesitate to pronounce this terrible condition a the combatants grow more and more inflamed, and excesses on President should hesitate to pronounce this terrible condition a public war and to recognize it as such. True, it is not civilized warfare. It is mercenary and without just cause on the part of the aggressor—Spain—and so cruel on both sides, according to the President's statement, that it is out of the pale of Christian toleration and is massacre, rapine, and extermination.

The President then states the unavoidable connection of our country with this savage holocaust. He says:

These inevitable entanglements of the United States with the rebellion in Cuba, the large American property interests affected, and considerations of philanthropy and humanity in general have led to a vehement demand in various quarters for some sort of positive intervention on the part of the United States.

There is no color of remonstrance or reproach to our people in this reference to their attitude or their sympathy for the suffering people of Cuba. The President seems to consider it as rational commendable, and as having weight in a country where the will of the people, even if it is not always thought to be wise, is the law to our public servants, when it is constitutionally expressed. In further justification of our people, the President says:

In point of fact, they have a concern with it which is by no means of a wholly sentimental or philanthropic character. It [the Island of Cuba] lies so near to us as to be hardly separated from our territory. Our actual pecuniary interest is second only to that of the people and Government of Spain. It is reasonably estimated that at least from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 of American capital are invested in plantations and in rallroad, mining, and other business enterprises on the island. The volume of trade between the United States and Cuba, which in 1889 amounted to about $4,000,000, rose in 1886 to about $103,000,000, and in 1894, the year before the present insurrection broke out, amounted to nearly $96,000,000.

He does not state what it is at this time. The report of the Secretary of State adds some statements in general terms as to a part of the wrongs that our people have suffered in Cuba, the details of which are probably withheld because they might excite the people to some rash acts of resentment or retaliation.

These acts, which I will proceed to read, as they are stated, in the report of the Secretary of State are treated by him and the President as matters of serious concern to the Government, while their redress, for the benefit of the people or for their security, is summed up in pecuniary demands that already exceed $19,000,000. The cash account of our losses is evidently kept carefully. Congress is still left responsible, it seems, for devising some means of correcting or preventing these wrongs which is more effective than the filing of claims for damages in our Department of State. On the international question the President says:

Besides this large pecuniary stake in the fortunes of Cuba, the United States finds itself inextricably involved in the present contest in other ways, both vexatious and costly.

This grave declaration seems fatal to peace.

Then the Secretary adds a more specific statement of the facts of this vexatious, costly, and inextricable involvement. He specifies in his statements the following:

ies in his statements the following:

(a) To illustrate these conditions, the insurgent chiefs assert the military power to compel peaceable citizens of the United States within their reach to desist from planting or grinding cane, under the decreed penalty of death and of destruction of their crops and mills; but the measure is one of sheer force without justification under public law. The wrongs so committed against the citizens of a foreign State are without an international forum of redress to which the Government of the United States may have recourse as regards its relation to the perpetrators. The acts are those of anarchy, and in default of the responsibilities of de facto Statehood in the case there remains only the territorial accountability of the titular sovereign within the limits of its competency to repress the wrongs complained of.

He might well have added that such wrongs are not the subjects.

He might well have added that such wrongs are not the subjects of civil litigation. They are war topics.

(b) The nature of the struggle, however, deserves most earnest consideration. The increased scale on which it is waged brings into bolder relief all the appalling phases which often appear to mark contests for supremacy among the Latin races of the Western Hemisphere. Excesses before confined to a portion of the island become more impressive when wrought throughout its whole extent, as now. The insurgent authority, as has been seen, finds no regular administrative expression; it is asserted only by the sporadic and irresponsible force of arms. The Spanish power, outside of the larger towns and their immediate suburbs, when manifested at all, is equally forceful and arbitrary.

(c) The only apparent aim on either side is to cripple the adversary by indiscriminate destruction of all that by any chance may benefit him. The populous and wealthy districts of the center and the west, which have escaped harm in former contests, are now ravaged and laid waste by the blind fury of the respective partisans. The principles of civilized warfare, according to the code made sacred by the universal acquiescence of nations, are only too often violated with impunity by irresponsible subordinates, acting at a distance from the central authority and able to shield themselves from just censure or punishment by false or falsified versions of the facts.

The killing and summary execution of noncombatants is frequently reported, and while the circumstances of the strife are such as to preclude accurate or general information in this regard, enough is known to show that the number of such cases is considerable. In some instances, happly few, American citizens have fallen victims to these savage acts.

A large part of the correspondence of the State Department with its agents in Cuba has been devoted to these cases of assault upon the rights of our citizens. In no instance has earnest remonstrance and energetic appeal been omitted. But the representatives of the Spanish power often find it easily practicable to postpone explanations and reparation on the ground of alleged ignorance of facts or for other plausible reasons.

Its effect upon the personal security of our citizens in Cuba is not the only alarming feature of the reign of arbitrary anarchy in that island. Its influence upon the fortunes of those who have invested their capital and enterprise there, on the assumed assurance of respect for law and treaty rights, is no less in point.

This indictment of Spain by the Secretary of State is indorsed "a true bill" by the President, and it charges a capital offense in every count. The Congress of the United States has never been presented with a stronger or more moving statement of facts, demanding the immediate and determined intervention of the United States, than the President has thus solemnly laid before the political and war-making department of the Government.

The Constitution enjoins upon the President that "he shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." Congress has also Congress has also required the President, as soon as practicable, to communicate to Congress all the facts and proceedings relative to any case in which a citizen of the United States has been unjustly deprived of his liberty by, or under the authority of, any foreign government; and has made it his duty forthwith to demand of such govern-ment the reasons of such imprisonment.

The official and conclusive statement of the cruel death of some innocent and unarmed citizens of the United States in Cuba, and the taking of others from their homes in the country and their virtual imprisonment in the towns and villages, and their outlawry, if they fail to inscribe their names on rosters kept for the purpose, within a short period of time, creates the emergency that requires the President to give information of the facts, and equally requires Congress to act with reference to them. As the President has omitted to state the facts in detail, Congress is not so informed as to be enabled to act with certainty, and is left in doubt as to the propriety of further delay, which the President seems to advise, in taking measures to relieve our people in Cuba from this inhuman treatment.

Another case, of more marked significance, is thus stated in the report of the Secretary of State, which is made a part of the President's message to Congress:

dent's message to Congress:

In April last, the Competitor, a small schooner of American registry, eluding the vigilance of the Federal authorities, took on board men and supplies presumably intended to aid the Cuban insurrection, and reached the coast of that island near San Cayetano. Being discovered by the Spanish coast guard, a conflict ensued, resulting in the capture of a number of those on board as well as the seizure of the vessel. The prisoners, among them several American citizens, were subjected to a summary military trial, which, although conducted by an admiralty court, alleged to be competent, appeared to have lacked the essential safeguards of procedure stipulated by the existing conventions between the United States and Spain. This Government promptly intervened to secure for its implicated citizens all the rights to which they were clearly entitled, including appeal from the pronounced sentence of death. Their cases were subsequently carried to the higher tribunal at Madrid, which has set the conviction aside and remanded the cases for retrial.

At the first session of this Congress the Senate, having been informed only by common rumor of the existence of the facts above stated, and having awaited with due respect the action of the President under the mandatory law in section 1001 of the Revised Statutes, was anxious, for reasons of grave public impor-

Revised Statutes, was anxious, for reasons of grave public importance, to be officially informed as to that transaction.

The Senate therefore sent the President a respectful resolution requesting him to inform this body as to that unpleasant event.

The President declined to inform the Senate as to the facts in the case, and what is above quoted is all the information that he

The Frestaent technica to morm the Senate as to the lates in the case, and what is above quoted is all the information that he has sent to Congress touching the Competitor case. The Senate had neither the right nor the purpose to relieve the Executive from the duty of communicating the facts in the Competitor case to Congress, in obedience to the statute.

The above indefinite outline of a terrible wrong to "several American citizens," whose names and places of residence are not stated in the report of the Secretary of State, on its face requires the prompt and decisive action of Congress.

The facts should be again demanded by a resolution of the Senate, which I now have the honor to present to this body.

No crime is stated in this report against any law, for it is the right of the people of the United States, under our laws and our treaties with Spain, to visit the Island of Cuba and to sell supplies not contraband to Cubans. If they are only "presumably intended to aid the Cuban insurrection," or if that intention is proven, our citizens are not subject under our treaties with Spain to the outlawry of a summary military trial "and a conviction and sentence to death," as was done for an offense that is not capital, even upon a presumable intention to aid the Cuban insurrecand sentence to death," as was done for an one see that is not captal, even upon a presumable intention to aid the Cuban insurrection. We are told by the Secretary of State that "the particulars of many of these cases" (presumably including the Competitor case) "will be found in the collected annual volume entitled 'Foreign Relations of the United States.'" This collected volume may not be printed before this Congress is ended, so that we can not get a knowledge of the facts.

It needed no judgment of an appellate Spanish court to determine that under our treaties with Spain and under the laws of nations applicable in time of peace a summary military trial before a court of admiralty could not condemn a citizen of the United States to death for the offense described in the report of the Secretary act advisedly in this grave matter until we make another effort to

Such a court could not have jurisdiction to try a citizen of the United States for such an offense, and his death, if it follows such a sentence, would be murder of the same description as that inflicted in the case of the people found on board the Virginius. "The appeal from the pronounced sentence of death" was an appeal by the otherwise helpless Americans to the mercy of Spain. This was not the right to which they were entitled from Spain or from their own Government. They were entitled to the whole power of the United States, in accordance with our treaties, for their protection against a trial by a tribunal that had no right to arraign them or try them for the offense with which they were charged, and Congress is not yet informed of the charges against them.

We are told that a higher tribunal at Madrid has set aside their conviction "and remanded the cases for trial." So far as we are furnished with any light on this grave dilemma the cases against these American citizens are remanded for trial to the same military tribunal that is without jurisdiction to hear them. If they are remanded to some other tribunal, why has not the President informed Congress of the fact, that they shall decide what is required by the country to be done for the security of their rights and the safety of their lives?

The Senate has not been indifferent or remiss in its duty toward these American citizens in their imprisonment in foul Spanish these American citizens in their imprisonment in foul Spanish dungeons during the long months of anguish through which they have lingered under sentence of death. Although their case has not been thought worthy of mention by the President, and their names or other means of identification are not given by the Secretary in his report, the Senate has taken the testimony of credible witnesses, some of whom were present at that "summary military trial," and has proven that it was as hasty and as unfair as a drumbeed court married and that the prigners were not repredrumhead court-martial, and that the prisoners were not represented by their chosen counsel; that they had no witnesses in their defense; that they did not understand the accusation against them, which, with the testimony for the Government, was in the Spanish language, and that no consul or representative of the United States was present to witness the trial. The youngest of these men, who had scarcely attained to his manhood, is a person of excellent family and of good character, who went as a newspaper correspondent to Cuba only for the purpose of gaining the infor-mation about the war the want of which has caused the Government serious perplexity.

This unnamed noncombatant sufferer is still immured in some Spanish prison to await a trial that is now as tardy, when a conviction is uncertain, as it was hasty when a death sentence was was preordained by Spanish vengeance.

The "business interests" are using this shining beacon of Spanish wrath to warn Americans from selling food and medicines to ish wrath to warn Americans from selling food and medicines to Cuban insurgents, while they are growing rich in selling horses, cattle, coal, and military and naval supplies to the Spaniards to aid in the extermination of the native Cubans.

It is for such purposes that, in the language of the President, "the United States is compelled to actively police a long line of seacoast against unlawful expeditions." If war exists in Cuba those people could freely trade with ours. Being an insurrection, to trade with them is death according to Spanish law, and we are standing by to witness this tragedy with composure, because it is "perilous and injurious to our own interests" to interrupt our business interests in controlling and supplying the Spanish our business interests in controlling and supplying the Spanish markets in Cuba.

It is a most unfortunate mistake to say that anything that will save American life is "a proposition no longer urged" by those who demand the rights of our people in trading with Cuba or in the offices of humanity toward those oppressed people.

The President turns toward Congress with hesitating doubts as

The President turns toward Congress with nestiating doubts as to their having anything to do with any question arising in this grave situation, and excuses himself for the allusion he makes to that departure by saying, after some cautionary advice about "undue stimulation and ill-timed expression of feeling:"

But I have deemed it not amiss to remind Congress that a time may arrive when a correct policy and care for our interests * * * will constrain our Government to such action as will subserve the interests thus involved and at the same time promise to Cuba and its inhabitants an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace.

Why this pregentionery reminder is given to Congress is not Why this precautionary reminder is given to Congress is not very apparent. I assume that a President will not threaten war with a foreign power and remind Congress of its duty in that re-gard unless he believes that sufficient grounds exist for the open and fearless discussion of the subject. Among the remedies for the great wrongs which he charges up to Spain—if our proposed friendly intervention is not accepted—war is the only one left, since the President rejects the recognition of belligerent rights, which only means neutrality between the warring parties.

The attitude of the President is not consistent with neutrality.

It means war with Spain, or the acceptance by Spain and Cuba of his friendly intervention to give autonomy to Cuba, sovereignty to Spain, and peace to both countries. So I read the President's message, and in that light I must take my attitude as a Senator.

I am not willing to assist the President in the project of intervention by duress or threats of war. If we must intervene, I prefer open war to the sort of intrusive policy that was tried and failed in Hawaii. Here are resolutions of honorable Senators which demand open war with Spain or such a declaration of the independence of Cuba as will doubtless cause Spain to make war against the United States. I am required to vote on these propositions, and I owe it to Alabama, the Senate, and myself that I shall be able to justify my vote upon the facts as they exist, and the laws of nations as I understand them, and the feeling I entertain for the oppressed, who lift up appealing hands and call for help against despotic cruelty and misrule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senator from Alabama will please suspend. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 7864) to amend the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will be agreeable to the committee to have the bill remain as it is until the Senator finishes his remarks. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid informally aside, that the Senator from Alabama may conclude his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I find in the President's message statements of fact (to which I have already referred by quoting therefrom) which demand that the Government of the United States, in justice to our own people, should command and enforce the peace in

If the United States can do this, as was done in 1878 by Spanish recognition of the Republic of Cuba as a treaty-making power, no one can complain of the adjustment they may make; but it does not follow that the United States shall not have full ''indemnity for the past and security for the future" upon the basis of the solemn statement made in the message of the President. These great wrongs must be compensated, and the future peace of our own border must be compensated, and the right regard of our own border must be guaranteed through our own strength rightfully exerted, and not be left dependent upon promises made by Spain alone, or else we are bound to adopt the resolution of the Senator from Texas. Now, what hope is there that this comprehensive plan of settlement can be secured? I answer to my own judgment and conscience and in accord with the convictions of my constituents, who are near neighbors to Cuba, that it is utterly hopeless.

If the pacification of Cuba is accomplished through the intervention of the United States, it will not be by peaceable intervention, nor can the wrongs done to our people ever be redressed by any other means than compulsion. Spain can not plead guilty to the barbarities against our people, as they are stated in the President's message, without confessing to inveterate and malig-nant hatred toward them and the United States, which would make her an unsafe neighbor in Cuba. If she pleads, in avoidance, her inability to prevent these cruel and destructive wrongs and injuries, she must confess her inability and unfitness to provide permanent and just government in Cuba. With us this is an evil that reaches out through the ages to come, and it challenges this generation of our people to the duty of saving their posterity from this terrible infliction.

Spain must see, as Europe sees, that the despotic severity of Bourbon rule, as it has been manifested in all her history, can not be maintained by sheer force against the native Cubans, whose eyes are constantly fixed upon the flag that represents the personal and political liberties of our great Republic, and whose dearest hopes are excited in their free and welcome association with our prosperous and happy people. We can not become the propagandists or the defenders of absolutism in government; neither can we withhold our sympathies from those who seek the liberties can we withhold our sympathies from those who seek the liberties we enjoy and suffer in the support of the right of the Cuban peo-ple to throw off the galling yoke of bondage to a foreign people 3,000 miles distant from them, who hold them as feudatories of the Spanish Crown.

If, for just cause, Spain has been compelled to abdicate her sovereignty in all the twelve great States in Spanish America, there is no reason why we should deny to Cuba the right of home rule and sovereign independence, for reasons more just and causes more imperative than any other Spanish-American State has ever claimed as the ground of revolt.

No State in Spanish America was ever forced to endure such

No State in Spanish America was ever forced to endure such oppressions, in peace or war, as the President in his message has justly charged to Spanish rule in Cuba.

Will the United States, in order to protect her own people in Cuba, or to promote or protect their commerce with that island, engage with Spain to hold those people to their allegiance or submission to the Spanish Government? If the Cubans refuse to accept our friendly intervention and reject the olive branch that the President is seemingly ready to extend to them, what will we do about it? will we do about it?

We can not be hereafter more indifferent to their fate than we have proven ourselves to be, in the executive department of our Government. We can not be more active and vigilant than we have been in shutting them off from the assistance of our people. Our ears can not be more deaf than they have been to the pleadings of humanity in their behalf. We can let them alone, declare and maintain our neutrality in the war, and that is all they ask at our hands. But we can never interfere with arms for the overthrow of the Cubans or their Republic, or to compel their Surrender to Spain.

In this condition of impotency to establish permanent peace in Cuba and permanent security for our own people while the Spanish Monarchy is dominant in that island, we have no alternative left to us but the single choice between the continuous repetition of the terrible evils portrayed in the message of the President or a base, humiliating, and cruel delay on our part while rapine and destruction are rampant in Cuba, in the hope that some fortunate turn in events may relieve us from a duty that some fortunate turn in events may relieve us from a duty that we owe to humanity, to Christian civilization, to the spirit and traditions of our country and our people, and to the lives and liberties of our people in Cuba who are now held beneath the cruel power of Spanish jealousy and revenge.

I had gathered a few great authorities found in the writings of our most eminent states men and our highest court to our most eminent statesmen and our highest court to support the conclusions I have stated to the Senate, but I find that they need no other support than that sense of justice and national duty which is instinctive in the hearts and minds of all Americans. I do not rely upon any authority for the facts I have recited, except those stated in the message of the President and the report of the Secretary of State. That is enough. The facts are incontrovertible and our duty is plain. If we fail to act upon them, we take the responsibility of a delay to perform a plain duty at the expense of our people whose lives are in constant peril.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

MRS. ELIZA G. PYNE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday the bill (H. R. 3990) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza G. Pyne was passed by the Senate. I will state that the beneficiary under the bill is now drawing a pension; and although there is some informality in the matter, which I will not stop to explain, I move that the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the votes will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to reconsider the report in this case.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. PALMER May 9,

1896, as follows:

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. Palmer May 9, 1896, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom the bill (S. 894) granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach was recommitted, together with the objections of the President thereto, beg leave to report:

The committee have reconsidered said bill, and considered the objections of the President thereto, and recommend its passage notwithstanding his objections.

The facts of the case, as found by the committee, are that Peter H. Allabach was a soldier in the Mexican war, and participated in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca, and the military operations on the line of the Rio Grande. He conducted himself with conspicuous gallantry. He married the proposed beneficiary of this bill on the 30th of September, 1831. She is now fy years of age, and unable to earn her own support.

During the late civil war he was colonel of the One hundred and thirteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volanteers, and commanded a brigade in one or more severe battles. His conduct won the approbation of Gen. W. S. Hancock, Gen. A. A. Humphrey, and Gen. Henry S. Briggs, his immediate commanders. The letters of General Hancock, General Humphrey, and General Briggs are made part of this report.

After the close of the war of the rebellion Colonel Allabach returned to and engaged in the pursuits of civil life. He died in this city on the 11th of February, 1892.

This bill proposes to pay to Mrs. Nancy G. Allabach a pension of $30 per month, which is the pension allowed by the general law to disabled officers of the rank Colonel Allabach held in the service of the United States. All the facts before the committee, prove that Colonel Allabach was an officer of great merit, and rendered most valuable services to the country. His conduct as a citizen was exemplary, and he left his widow, the beneficiary of the bill before the committee, without other means of support than the small pension allowed by the general law. Upon these facts, the committee reported the bill,

"An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach," to the Senate, and recommended its passage. It passed both the Senate and House of Representatives; was laid before the President; was disapproved by him, and was returned to the Senate with his objections and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for reconsideration.

was laid before the President; was disapproved by him, and was returned to the Senate with his objections and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions for reconsideration.

Your committee recognizes the constitutional right and the duty of the President to refuse to sign any bill which has passed both Houses of Congress which he does not approve. "If he approve, he shall sign it, but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated." Your committee would give emphasis to that provision of the Constitution which makes the President a sharer with Congress in responsibility to the country for all legislation.

Becognizing this imperative obligation imposed upon the President by the Constitution, your committee proceed to a respectful consideration of the objections of the President to this bill.

The President, in his message containing his objection to this bill, correctly recites some of the facts which led your committee to recommend its passage, but he does not allude to the eminent and distinguished services rendered by the husband of the beneficiary in the war, with Mexico and in the late civil war, in which the integrity of the Union as well as the peace of the continent and the existence of popular constitutional government was involved. He says truly that "Colonel Allabach did not at any time apply for a pension," to which it may well be answered that no services rendered to the country, however brilliant or useful, are pensionable.

General pension laws are passed to make provision for the unfortunates but the brave and patrictic soldier, who on many occasions imperiled his life in defense of his country or for the maintenance of its just authority, may well have hoped that, though he passed through the perils of the battlefield without personal harm, those who control the treasury of a grateful country would, when appealed to directly, make provision for the dependent, loved wife whom he left poor and can no longer support or protect.

It is further stated b

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been heretofore read, the Chair is informed.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Senate Document No. 225, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Message from the President of the United States, returning, without his approval, Senate bill No. 894, entitled "An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach."

To the Senate:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without my approval Senate bill No. 894, entitled "An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach."

This bill provides for the payment of a pension of $30 a month to the beneficiary named as the widow of Peter H. Allabach.

This soldier served for nine months in the Army during the war of the rebellion, having also served in the war with Mexico.

He was mustered out of his last service on the 23d day of May, 1863, and died on the 11th of February, 1892.

During his life he made no application for pension on account of disabilities. It is not now claimed that he was in the least disabled as an incident of his military service, nor is it alleged that his death, which occurred nearly twenty-nine years after his discharge from the Army, was in any degree related to such service.

His widow was pensioned after his death under the statute allowing pensions to widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, without reference to the cause of the death of their husbands. Her case is also, indirectly, one of those provided for by the general act passed in 1890, commonly called the dependent pension law.

It is proposed, however, by the special act under consideration to give this widow a pension of $30 a month without the least suggestion of the death or disability of her husband having been caused by his military service, and solely, as far as is discoverable, upon the ground that she is poor and needs the money.

This condition is precisely covered by existing general laws; and if a precedent is to be established by the special legislation proposed, I do not see how the same relief as is contained in this bill can be denied to the many thousand widows who, in a similar situation, are now on the pension rolls under general laws.

GOVERNORS ISLAND, NEW YORK HARBOR, April 25, 1879.

Col. P. H. Allabach is known to me as a brave and faithful soldier, who has served the Government as an officer of the Army during the Mexican war and the late rebellion. In the latter war he was colonel of the One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers and a brigade commander in the division of Gen. A. A. Humphreys.

His services to the country commend him for the position he now seeks.

Major-General, United States Army.

WASHINGTON, November 6, 1866.

WASHINGTON, November 6, 1886.

Sin: Understanding that Col. P. H. Allabach, of Washington (late of the One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvanda Volunteers), is an applicant for the appointment of naval storekeeper at the Washington Navy-Yard, I beg leave to state that Colonel Allabach served under my command in the Army of the Potomac as commander of the Second Brigade of the Third Division (my division) of the Fifth Corps from the 14th September, 1862, until the middle of May, 1863, when his regiment and brigade were mustered out of service, their term having expired. During all this time Colonel Allabach's brigade took a conspicuous part in the operations of the Army. At the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th December, he was especially distinguished for the gallant manner in which he led his brigade against the stone wall on the right of our Army. It is generally conceded that the attack of my division was the most spirited made that day on our right. At Chancellorsville he exhibited the same zeal and spirit; in fact, his conduct throughout all the operations of the Army was of the same character. This brigade was noted on all occasions for promptitude and good discipline, the result of his devotion to duty, his good judgment, and fine soldierly qualities.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., January 28, 1863.

PITTSFIELD, MASS., January 28, 1863.

My Dear Colonel: I am just in receipt of your favor of the 26th instant, for which please accept my acknowledgments. I assure you that you and your noble command have been much in my mind during my long and discouraging separation from you, and you may well imagine that I have had a very large share in the admiration which your gallant charge at Fredericksburg excited throughout the country. I congratulate you and the officers and brave men of the brigade upon such distinguished conduct. My brief but pleasant acquaintance with the command gave me the assurance that it would never be found wanting in the hour of conflict, but I must confess that I was not prepared to learn that in their first engagement they have eclipsed the veteran regiments of the old Army of the Potomac.

My second thought after that of exultation was that the officer who had led such a command so creditably was entitled to retain the command; and as I wrote to Lieutenant Whittlesey, I had determined, in justice to you, to request at headquarters that I might be transferred to some other position in order that you might be retained in command. But before I was able to get to Washington, and without any suggestion on my part, I received about a week since an order from Headquarters of the Army directing me to report for duty as soon as my health would permit to Major-General Schenk, commanding Middle Department, at Baltimore. So it seems that my connection with the gallant Pennsylvanians is dissolved before an acquaintance has been fairly formed. I am sincerely grateful to you for your kind expression of a desire for my return. Nothing but the considerations before mentioned respecting your own claims would have induced me to have suggested a change, and now that the change has been effected without suggestion on my part, I can but hope that it is an indication that you are not to be disturbed.

I regret exceedingly any difficulty with Lieutenant Whittlesey. I am confident that any fault. I would write mo

HENRY S. BRIGGS. Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I have been content to submit this message of the President, together with the report of the committee and the testimonials which have been read of the dis-tinguished merit of Colonel Allabach, and have no desire to discuss the questions which are involved.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] asked me rather significantly if I desired to have this bill passed notwithstanding the objections of the President. I have the most profound respect for the President, and I have a respect equally profound for the position of a Senator. I think the President ought at all times to discharge his own duties with absolute fearlessness, and I think that the Senate ought with equal fearlessness to discharge its

It involves no reproach on either side, and no controversy need arise between the President and the Senate when the Senate chooses to discharge its own duties. I have earnestly, however, opposed the views of the President in one particular. In my judgment, where the Congress of the United States determines upon the amount of a pension to be paid to any meritorious pensioner the President ought not to interfere in determining the more amount. Let not willing that a precedent shall be the sioner the President ought not to interfere in determining the mere amount. I am not willing that a precedent shall be established by which the President shall, for such reasons as he gives in this veto message, decline to sign a pension bill. I recognize it to be his right todo so, and in a proper case he ought to do so—I mean in a case that is proper in his judgment he ought to do so—but I am not willing that the President shall prescribe a rule for the Congress of the United States in regard to the amount of pension to be paid to any person who may be the object of the pational sion to be paid to any person who may be the object of the national bounty.

Colonel Allabach served in two wars. He discharged his duty in both; he discharged his duty brilliantly in the civil war, so much so as to secure the encomiums, the thanks, the complimentary notices of distinguished public men.

I have insisted, therefore, that this bill is a proper one, and that it ought to be passed notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him—I was not in the Chamber during the reading of the report whether this is a case in which the President recognizes the right whether this is a case in which the President recognizes the right to a pension, but simply questions the amount?

Mr. PALMER. As I understand it, it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claimant is receiving all the general law allows. There is no question about that.

Mr. PALMER. The widow is receiving that amount. This bill proposes to give her, instead of $8 a month, which I believe she is now receiving, $30 a month. Is not that the amount?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the amount; and I will say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that it is precisely what we are doing almost every day in the Senate of the answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that it is precisely what we are doing almost every day in the Senate of the United States. The bill recognizes the rank this officer held, the rank of colonel, and proposes to give his widow the pension of the widow of a colonel, instead of that of a widow of a private. Colonel Allabach served five years.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator if that practice of the Senate, as the Senator states it, be correct, would it not be wise for his committee to report a general law covering such cases and regulating the amount of pension by rank?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the question of regulating this matter by general law is an easy point to suggest to the Senate, but it has not been done and will not be done. We consider these cases as individual cases.

Colonel Allabach served for five years in the Mexican war, having service that was brilliant in the extreme. I had in my desk when I left the Senate at the close of the first session of this Congress a letter written by this soldier to his wife from Mexico detailing a certain service which he performed in one of the great battles of the Mexican war when his horse was shot from under him and he received a wound. I regret that I can not now find that letter. I did not know that this matter was to come up to-day. Very likely I returned the letter to the widow. It was a very pathetic letter, in which Colonel Allabach expressed to his wife the dangers and sufferings he was enduring in the Mexican war, but still his willingness to continue until the honor of the United States had been demonstrated and achieved.

In the late civil war he enlisted, and served the period for which he enlisted with marked distinction. It will be observed that General Briggs, who was his superior in command, when at his home in Pittsfield, Mass., in consequence of illness, wrote a letter to Colonel Allabach, after he had made a most brilliant charge at the head of a brigade, expressing to him his regret that he had not been appointed as a brigadier-general to command that bri-gade, and his regret that he himself had been recalled to again assume the command.

I have no doubt from evidence which has come to me, largely oral, it is true, that Colonel Allabach might himself have been pensioned for a long series of years if he had applied for a pension; and that is one of the points on which the President bases his veto message—that the soldier himself had not been pensioned. I have in mind a multitude of soldiers who performed most conspicuous been patriotic enough, having means of support, not to ask the Government to bestow any of its bounty or its funds upon them. I have no doubt that Colonel Allabach belonged to that class of patriotic service in two wars, and we simply propose to give her the pension of the widow of a colonel, a thing which has been done over and over again since I have been a member of the National Legislature, in cases of much less conspicuous merit than the one which is now before us.

It does seem to me that the veto message was written upon a misapprehension of the facts in this case, and that the duty of the National Congress in this matter, without any reflection upon the President of the United States—because I certainly shall utter no word of reflection or suggestion in that direction—is plain to do this just act, generous, it may be, but just, nevertheless, and give to this widow a pension commensurate with the rank which her to this widow a pension commensurate with the rank which her distinguished husband held.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President —

Mr. PALMER. I doubt somewhat, Mr. President, whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. BATE. I was just going to correct a statement of the Senator from New Hampshire as to the time Colonel Allabach. served in the Mexican war. The Senator spoke of five years' served in that war. I wish to say that the Mexican war lasted only two years. So, of course, the Senator is mistaken in that statement. I know nothing about the services of Colonel Allabach in the last war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, on that point it may be that some-body has made a mistake in writing a report. In a report written by Mr. McClellan, of the House of Representatives, I think the son of the late distinguished General McClellan, he says:

The military record of Peter H. Allabach, who served as colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, and also in the Mexican war, is as follows:

Peter H. Allabach was mustered into service as colonel One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers August 18, 1862, to serve nine months; was in command of the Third Provisional Brigade from August 22, 1862, to October 10, 1862, and of the Second Brigade, Third Division, Fifth Army Corps, from October 16, 1962, to May 14, 1863; and was mustered out of service with the field and staff of his regiment May 23, 1863.

The records on file in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army show that Peter H. Allabach was enlisted in Company K, Third United States Infantry—

He was in the Regular Army, I take it-at Philadelphia, Pa., November 25, 1844, was transferred to Company E, same regiment, September, 1849, and was discharged from the latter company, as a sergeant, at Paso del Norte, N. Mex., November 25, 1849, by reason of expiration of term of service.

I will say that a portion of this five years' service was in the Regular Army and not all of it in the Mexican war. It was a slip of the tongue when I said he was five years in the Mexican nated in 1848.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to be corrected by the distinguished soldier from Tennessee on that point. I was aware of that historical fact quite as well as the Senator, but am glad to have the record correct. Colonel Allabach served five years, never-

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to address a word to the Senator from Missouri. As the Senator knows, an agreement has been entered into that the immigration bill shall be voted upon at 4 o'clock on Thursday. It seems to be the duty of the committee to see to it that Senators wishing to debate the bill shall have such time as is available between now and that hour. If there are Senators here who desire to speak upon the bill this afternoon, I certainly think the Senate ought to remain and hear the debate. If there is no Senator who desires to speak, of course, Mr. President, I do not wish to prevent the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I can answer only for myself. I do not wish to debate the bill. I understood that we fixed the hour of 4 o'clock debate the bill. I understood that we fixed the hour of 4 o'clock Thursday for taking a vote upon the measure, in order to enable the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Gibson], who is now ill, to speak. I do not know of any Senator who desires to speak at this time. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 16, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, December 15, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. ADAM HAND.

Mr. PRINCE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill (H. R. 7906) to grant an honorable discharge to Adam Hand, as first lieutenant of Company B, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge, of date May 29, A. D. 1865, to Adam Hand, as first lieutenant of Company B, One hundred and eightyfourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Reserving the right to object, I ask for the

The report (by Mr. Griffin) was read, as follows:

reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GRIFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1990) granting an honorable discharge to Adam Hand, having considered the same, would report the following as a substitute therefor:

"Ee it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, auhorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge, of date May 29, A. D. 1825, to Adam Hand, as first lieutenant of Company B, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers."

Your committee find that at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress the Committee on Military Affairs submitted a favorable report upon a similar bill for the benefit of said Adam Hand, which report is in part as follows:

"It appears from the record of this soldier that he was mustered into the service on the 28d of April, 1861, as a private in Company H, Tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three months, and was mustered out as such with the company July 30, 1861; that he again enlisted and was enrolled October 30, 1862, and mustered in to date November I, 1862, as sergeant of Company F, One hundred and seventy-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to serve three years. He appears on the muster roll of the company for May and June, 1864, as sergeant, and was mustered in as first lieutenant of same company.

"On the 9th of March, 1865, he was granted leave of absence to enable him to attend his family. But while at home said Hand was taken sick, and, although he forwarded the affidavits of physicians to show his sickness and asking for an extension of furlough, it appears from the record that his colonel reported him for absence without leave and had such proceedings taken as resulted in his dismissal from the service.

"Your committee have carefully examined the record relating to the dismissal of Lieutenant Hand, and are of the opinion that an injusti Stover joined the regiment and assumed command, but I continued with the regiment until its final muster out of service. I remember the above-named Agam Hand, of Company B, said regiment, and at my recommendation he had, about December, 1894, been commissioned and mustered in as first lieutenant of said company, and about March, 1865, he was granted leave of absence, after which date I do not remember seeing him. That up to that time said Hand had always proven himself to be a good, faithful soldier, and I never heard any thing detrimental of him, and I would furthermore say that he would never have been commissioned first lieutenant had he been guilty of any act of cowardice. In addition to this I would say that I never heard or knew said Adam Hand to make any remarks lieutenant had he been guilty of any act of cowardice. In addition to this I would say that I never heard or knew said Adam Hand to make any remarks lieutenant had he been guilty of any act of cowardice. In addition to this I would say that I never heard or knew said Adam Hand to make any remarks these facts from actual personal knowledge, and, having know I he sides while in said regiment fall any of the facts were otherwise I would surely know it."

"Adam Hand, of Sterling, III., of date August 22, 1863, makes oath that he served as a private in Company H, Tenth Pennsylvania Infantry, from April 22, 1861, to July 30, 1861, when the term of service of said arcgiment expired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Berry] will explain whether this bill involves any increased expense.

Mr. BERRY. No; it is really a saving to the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this a public-building bill?

No, sir; it simply provides that the distance between the public building in course of construction at Newport, when and the adjacent buildings be reduced from 50 feet, as originally and the adjacent buildings be reduced from 50 feet, as originally adjacent. nally provided, to 40 feet, which is the uniform rule adopted by the Government.

Mr. BERRY. No, sir. Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, 40 feet is the usual rule in Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir. If 50 feet should be reserved the expense to the Government would be greater.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the considera-tion of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

VESSELS PROPELLED BY GAS, NAPHTHA, ETC.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to inquire whether the bill has been considered by the appropriate committee of the House?

Mr. BENNETT. It has been considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and reported favorably, and, in addition to that, its passage is recommended by the Treasury Department in the letter appended to the report.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether he has had an understanding on this question with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER], who at the last session asked me in his absence to object to the consideration of this bill if unanimous consent should be asked. consent should be asked.

Mr. BENNETT. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARD-NER] is aware that this bill was to be called up at the first opportunity

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Then I have no objection.
Mr. COOPER of Florida. I should like to hear the report read.
Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me to ask whether there is any reason why this bill should not have gone to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, instead of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to the subcommittee on ships, shipping, and sanitation, and the matter was fully considered.

Mr. HOPKINS. But why did it not go to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. BENNETT. Because such a reference would have been improper. It was properly referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Florida ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. Bennett) was read at length.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration. of the bill?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I object.

WEAR CRAWFORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 514) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Wear Crawford. The bill was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs recommend the following amendment:

Add at the close of the bill the words "Said discharge to be dated June 28, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall become due or payable by virtue of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday an adverse report was submitted from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] with reference to the bill (H. R. 4057) in relation to cigarettes, which was laid on the table. I desire to have that bill, with the accompanying report and the views of the minority, referred to the House Calendar under the rule.

The SPEAKER. It can be done at the request of any member.

Mr. TERRY. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The report, with the views of the minority, at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas, will be referred to the House Calendar.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. POWERS. I now insist upon the regular order, and call up the bill (S. 1832) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company. I send to the Clerk's desk the report of the committee, which I ask to have read.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. McRAE. To inquire if the Committee on Pacific Railroads has been called. Is this the committee hour, and has that committee been called?

The SPEAKER. The SPEAKER. This is the committee hour, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers] because of an arrangement which was made in the House that whenever of an arrangement which was made in the House that whenever the time came for calling committees he should be recognized.

Mr. McRAE. Then it is to be treated as if the committee had been regularly called.

The SPEAKER. As if the committee had been called.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the morning hour.

Mr. POWERS. I ask to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. Powers) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pacific Railroads, having considered the bill (S. 1832) entitled "An act to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871. concerning the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company," respectfully report that they adopt House Report No. 1598, upon a House bill identical in terms with said Senate bill, which is hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of said Senate bill.

[House Report No. 1598, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pacific Railroads, having considered the bill (H. R. 6398) entitled "A bill to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871," respectfully report:

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the nacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the substitute as proposed, and that as thus amended the bill be passed.

The committee adopt the report (No. 787) made by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary April 20, 1896, in reference to Senate bill 1832, being a bill identical with House bill 6398.

[Senate Report No. 737, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.] The Committee on the Judiciary, having considered the bill (S. 1832) entitled "A bill to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1871," respectfully report:

By special act of July 27, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 292), Congress incorporated the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, with usual corporate powers, and authorized the company to construct, maintain, and operate a line of railroad and telegraph on prescribed route, substantially along the thirty-fifth parallel, from Springfield, Mo., across the Indian, New Mexico, and Arizona Territories, and California to the Pacific. To aid construction thereof grants of public lands, right of way, and material therefor were made (secs. 2 and 3). In addition to the plain purpose of the pacific of the control of the control of the pacific of public lands, right of way, and material therefor were made (secs. 2 and 3). In addition to the plain purpose of the pacific of the charter act, "that said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, or any part thereof, shall be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also stubject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government trans."

It was then assumed that the road would be built by popular subscription, and the sole direct authority given to raise funds for that purpose was the authorized issuance of $10,000,000 of its capital stock. By section 8 construction was to commence within a prescribed period and proceed annually for prescribed direct authority given to raise funds for that purpose was the authorized issuance of $10,000,000 of its capital stock. By section 8 construction was to commence within a prescribed period and proceed annually for prescribed direct and the United States may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road." It appears that such popular subscription failed to materialize, and there being no express authority in the charter act whereby the company of the United States, reserved by section 8, supra, had accrued, the company applied to Congress and obtained the passage of an act, on April 20, 1871, authorizing mortgage its franchises in addition t

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the report so far read covers the the report so that the delication of the report so that the delication of the sound, and unless some gentleman desires the balance of it, it will save some time to omit the further reading.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the report states, this bill simply provides that the mortgage bondholders of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company may reorganize into a corporation—in other words, may have the right to be a corporation. The necessity for this bill arises from the fact that the Supreme Court in two cases has bill arises from the fact that the Supreme Court in two cases has decided that the mortgage of a railroad company, together with its franchises, does not carry the right to be a corporation. Everybody connected with this original company supposed that the right to mortgage, given them by Congress in 1871, which in terms embraced the franchises, was broad enough to enable them, on a foreclosure sale, to organize as a corporation; but the Supreme Court says no; hence the necessity for the passage of this bill.

The House will remember that this company was started in 1866, was given a mammoth land grant of 42,000,000 acres, and that in 1871 it became necessary for the company, in order to build its road, to issue a mortgage. That mortgage was issued, covering the property and franchises of the road, but lacking this essential, vital point—the franchise to be a corporation.

Now, when this question was before the House on a former occasion it was said that this land grant was a monstrous land grant, that it was fraudulent, that great wrong was done to the Government in the amount of land granted to the railroad. Concede that to be true for the purposes of this argument; what has

It became a part of the rights of that company to take those lands; but it turns out upon investigation that the lands are in the arid region; they are good for nothing. The company itself, out of the 42,000,000 acres, has only succeeded in selling seven hundred the 42,000,000 acres, has only succeeded in sering seven hunted thousand and odd acres. A great proportion of the land has been forfeited to the Government, and a suit is now pending, and is up for argument in court to-day, to determine the right of the Government to forfeit the balance.

Government to forfeit the balance.

But be that as it may, this is the practical question that is presented to the House: This company, however fraudulent it may have been, however disproportionate its land grant may have been to its right to build a railroad to the California coast, nevertheless that wrongdoing is not to be imputed to the applicants for this charter. The applicants for this charter are the innocent parties who advanced their money upon a mortgage of this road. That money built the road. It could not have been built otherwise. As the report shows, it was supposed that private subscriptions along the line of the road would be ample to build the road, but those hopes proved to be delusive. The company were obliged to borrow money. They did borrow it, and A, B, C, innocent parties who had nothing whatever to do with any wrongdoing connected with the making of the land grant, advanced their money and the with the making of the land grant, advanced their money and the road was completed.

with the making of the land grant, advanced their money and the road was completed.

Now, it is highly improper to visit upon these innocent parties any wrongdoing that may have been practiced by the original promoters of the enterprise. There is no justice or propriety in that. These mortgage bonds are held by guardians, by trustees, by women, and by other parties, and the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRae] is that they be visited with the consequences and be made to suffer for that former wrongdoing, for which they are in no wise responsible. But now, Mr. Speaker, there was not any wrongdoing. The gift on the part of the Government of this 42,000,000 acres of land did not amount to anything to this company. As I have already said, they have sold only 708,000 acres out of the 42,000,000 acres given to them, for the simple reason that you might turn a razor-back pig loose on the land in that country and it could not get a living.

Mr. STEELE. That being the case, how did they expect to get subscribers along the line of the road to build this road?

Mr. POWERS. Because in those days there was a great fever for building these roads, especially to the Pacific. The Union Pacific was being built. Everybody turned his attention to the project of building railroads to the Pacific Ocean, and everybody who put his money in these roads going out West was sadly disappointed.

Mr. FOOTE. Where are these arid lands?

pointed.

Mr. FOOTE. Where are these arid lands? Mr. POWERS. They are in Arizona, the Indian Territory, New Mexico, etc., on the line of the road.

Now, the Government has already forfeited about 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 acres of the land, and claims the right to forfeit the balance; and there is no reason in the world why these people who have advanced their money and taken a mortgage upon this road and have purchased the property or are about to purchase it in the fere-closure sale should not have the right to be organized into a corclosure sale should not have the right to be organized into a corporation. Supposing you have the right to say they shall not have the right to do so, how do you leave the property and how do you leave the parties? You leave these mortgagees who have invested their money in these great properties without any right as a corporation and of continuing the railroad in the interests of the people along its lines.

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. Will the gentleman state to the House the difference between the bill he has offered and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas?

offered by the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. POWERS. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas provides very many things that nobody can live under. The gentleman, of course, will unfold his plan when he comes to it. It is a very objectionable plan. He has injected a penalty, consequent on what he says is the wrongdoing on the part of the principal parties on these improved the course.

consequent on what he says is the wrongdoing on the part of the original parties on these innocent parties. I say that the House of Representatives ought to be above that kind of legislation.

Mr. FLYNN. Is it not a fact that there is no new authority conferred upon this company that the old company did not have?

Mr. POWERS. There is no new authority whatever. If anybody will take the trouble to read the bill they will see that the only provided in the property of the conference of the confer provision in it which is operative is to simply give these parties the right to be organized into a corporation.

Mr. FLYNN. Another question. Is it not a fact that the railroads can not operate in the Indian Territory without a charter from Congress?

Mr. POWERS. They can not. There is no other way in which the road can be operated. It does not pay its current expenses now.

Mr. KNOX. As to this portion of the road which was the St. Louis and San Francisco, was not there a land grant which went with that road?

Government in the amount of land granted to the railroad. Concede that to be true for the purposes of this argument; what has that to do with the pending question? Congress enacted the law.

Mr. POWERS. Very likely. I do not know how that is.

Mr. KNOX. Did not the whole road pass to that corporation, and is it not now operated by it? Is it not that way?

Mr. POWERS. I presume that is so. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. KNOX. That is a corporation.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly. Mr. MOODY. My question is, Is it not a fact that this road at the present time is not worth any more than the mortgage upon it?

Mr. POWERS. Probably not.
Mr. MOODY. Why should any new corporation be permitted to issue stock in excess of the amount of the mortgage?

to issue stock in excess of the amount of the mortgage?

Mr. POWERS. On the question of stock, the gentleman will notice on page 4 it is to be assessed for money, labor, or property that may be necessary.

Mr. MOODY. I understand that perfectly; but it is provided that the amount of new issue of stock shall not exceed the aggregate amount which the old company had issued.

Mr. POWERS. Exactly.

Mr. MOODY. Now, the old company may have issued without consideration a hundred millions of stock.

Mr. POWERS. The old company, as the gentleman will see

Mr. POWERS. The old company, as the gentleman will see from the report of the Commissioner of Railroads, issued a capital of $79,000,000, which was mortgaged.

Mr. MOODY. What is the amount of the mortgage?

Mr. POWERS. The first mortgage $18,000,000, the second $20,000,000, and other bills payable $13,000,000.

Mr. MOODY. Are those secured by this mortgage?
Mr. POWERS. They will be secured by this mortgage if this additional stock is issued.

additional stock is issued.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does your bill restore any rights that have been forfeited?

Mr. POWERS. It does not touch the right of the Government to forfeit these lands. It expressly reserves to the Government all rights that it now has. And, Mr. Speaker, in this connection I wish to say that the United States Government has in its employ a special counsel to look after its land-grant interests, Mr. Joseph H. Call, and when the original bill was introduced into the Senate and was there pending Mr. Call wrote a letter to Senator White made sundry amendments to the bill then pend-Senator White made sundry amendments to the bill then pending. Those amendments having been made, and being acceptable to the counsel of the United States, this bill passed the Senate unanimously, and I will now ask the Clerk to read the letter of Mr. Call.

Mr. FOOTE. As I understand, this new bill does not deprive the Government of any rights that it had under the old law

Mr. POWERS. Of none whatever.
Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman whether the Government has not some right of free transportation over this road, and whether there is anything in the pending bill preserving that right?

Mr. POWERS. The Government does have a preferential right of transportation over the road for its own business, and this bill expressly retains that right.

Mr. PARKER. I do not find it in the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I would like the gentleman from Vermont to point that out in this bill.

Mr. POWERS. Well, if it is not there, we are perfectly willing to have it put in the bill.

Mr. POWERS. Well, if it is not there, we are perfectly willing to have it put in the bill.

Mr. TERRY. I know, but the gentleman has stated several times that this bill preserves all the existing rights of the Government, and now I want him to point out that provision.

Mr. POWERS. I supposed that the bill did contain that provision; but if it does not, let it be amended.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the provision is not in the bill.

Mr. POWERS. I ask that the Clerk read the letter of Mr. Call.

The letter was read, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 28, 1896.

Washington, D. C., March 28, 1896.

Dear Sir: As special counsel for the United States, having charge of the litigation in southern California which is seeking to enforce the rights of the Government to lands claimed to have been granted to various railroad companies, I am naturally interested on behalf of the Government in any legislation which may affect the rights of the Government in such lands as it is now seeking to recover from the claims of the various railroad companies.

I therefore carefully read the bill introduced by yourself (No. 1832) on January 29 for the purpose of authorizing a reorganization of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, and it seemed to me at the time that I first read it (and upon reflection I still adhere to the conclusion) that this bill did not sufficiently guard the rights of the Government. Hence I wrote to you, as you will remember, concerning it. Since that time, and within a few days, the representatives of the parties interested in the passage of the bill and myself have been in conference for the purpose of drawing up such a substitute as would be perfectly satisfactory to them and would fully protect every interest of the Government. I am happy to say that we have agreed upon a substitute which in my judgment clearly obviates any criticism, so far as the Government's interests and rights are concerned, and which is perfectly acceptable to the people who are interested in the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad and its indebtedness. I therefore inclose you copy of the bill so agreed upon, with the suggestion and request that, if it meets your approval, you will have it presented by the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for the original bill.

I think that you will quite agree with me, upon reading it, that this bill fully guards every interest of the Government and yet gives to the Atlantic and Pacific bondholders and parties interested all that they would be fairly entitled to under the various mortgages made by the road.

Owing to the fact that it is of a great deal of importance to the section of country through which the Atlantic and Pacific runs, and to the interests of southern California, to have the road reorganized as quickly as it may be, I very cheerfully suggest that you use your influence to procure the speedy passage of this bill.

Very truly, yours,

JOSEPH H. CALL.

Hon. Stephen M. White, United States Senate.

Mr. POWERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, to obviate the objection made by the gentleman from Arkansas and to prevent any possibility of doubt upon the point raised by him, I propose to amend the bill, in line 14 of page 2, by adding, after the word "corporation," the words "and be under the same obligations to the Government of the United States;" so that it will provide that the new company "shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold, and to exercise the same visible recognition. property so sold, and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a cor-poration, and be under the same obligations to the Government of the United States specified in the act of Congress approved July of the United States specified in the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866," and so on.

Mr. TERRY. Now, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the gentleman from Vermont, I want to call attention to this point: We have just had read from the Clerk's desk a letter or report from the attorney representing the United States, stating that this bill protects every right of the Government. There is an official statement from an official of the United States to Congress that this bill protects every right of the Government, and yet in the very next breath we find the gentleman in charge of the bill provery next breath we find the gentleman in charge of the bill proposing an amendment to protect certain rights of the Government. It shows how much reliance is to be placed on that report from a Government official whom the gentleman quotes as an authority on this subject.

Mr. GROUT. I think the gentleman from Arkansas misapprehends. I think my colleague does not believe this amendment necessary, but merely offers it to satisfy the gentleman from Arkansas

Mr. TERRY. Here is the provision in the old law:

That said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, or any part thereof, shall be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation.

That important provision in the original law is entirely left out unchanged as it stands.

Mr. GROUT. It is not written into this bill, but it is left unchanged as it stands.

Mr. POWERS. I did not yield to the gentleman from Arkansas for a speech, but merely to ask a question.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman yielded to me to make a suggestion, if I understood him, and I simply wanted to show the House how much reliance could be placed on the report of this Government officer as to the merits of this bill.

Mr. POWERS. I decline to yield further, Mr. Speaker. I proposed the amendment not because I thought it necessary, for it is not necessary, not because I distrusted the report of the Government counsel, for I do not, but because I wanted to make the bill satisfactory to the House. Now, if the amendment I proposed is not satisfactory to the gentleman from Arkansas, let him draw any amendment, in language as strong as he pleases to use, that will cover the rights of the United States Government, and I shall be glad to accept it. I desire to accept any amendment which will get rid of the technical objections of the gentleman from Arkansas to this bill. sas to this bill.

Mr. TERRY. I do not think that an objection that seeks to protect the rights of the United States is simply "technical." This is not a technical objection, the gentleman will permit me to say.

Mr. POWERS. As I have already said, this bill is entirely unobjectionable on its merits to any fair-minded man. Objection, if made, is made upon technical grounds, and I think it is below the dignity of this Congress to throttle a body of gentlemen who have put their money into an enterprise to build a railroad, by saying that they shall not have the poor boon of organizing themselves into a convergious so that they are convergion so that they are converged.

selves into a corporation so that they can operate their property.

Mr. MOODY. How much stock does the gentleman understand this bill authorizes the new corporation to issue?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a very pertinent inquiry.
Mr. POWERS. It authorizes the company to issue stock enough

Mr. FOWERS. I tauthorizes the company to issue stock chough to put itself in a condition to operate the road.

Mr. MOODY. I do not think that the gentleman's answer is specific enough for the House to act upon. We want to know how much stock this company is authorized to issue.

Mr. POWERS. No man can tell how much it will take for the purpose I have named; but the restriction is that the company shall issue stock only for actual property received.

Mr. MOODY. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. The provision of the bill is that two classes of stock may be issued. The second class is to be issued in return for property; but the first class may be issued in an amount "not to exceed the aggregate amount which the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company has already issued and is now outstanding."

Mr. POWERS. Exactly.

Mr. MOODY. Now, why should Congress authorize this corporation to organize itself upon a broader stock basis than the debt which has been foreclosed on this property?

Mr. POWERS. For the simple reason that the road as it is operated to-day is operated at a loss, and it can not be operated successfully without a further capitalization and the issue of new It is proposed that this company be allowed to issue stock up to the amount of the outstanding stock, share for share, and that a further amount may be issued for actual money or property received by the company.

Mr. MOODY. I ask the gentleman whether he would agree to an amendment in substantially this form:

Amend by striking out from the word "Provided," on page 2, line 32, to the Word "value," on page 3, line 41, and inserting the following:

"The capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the mortgage debt due and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure: Provided, That additional stock and bonds may be issued by the corporation upon the payment into its treasury therefor the full par value thereof in cash. No stock shall be issued until the Secretary of the Interior shall approve its issue and certify that it is issued in conformity to the provisions of this act. The total stock issued under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $100,000,000.00."

That would permit this corporation to make any new investments that they may desire.

Mr. POWERS. Does the gentleman offer that as an amend-

Mr. MOODY. I will do so with the assent of the gentleman. Mr. POWERS. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. POWERS. I am willing to accept that amendment. Several Members. Let it be read.

The amendment as just proposed by Mr. Moody was read.
Mr. POWERS. Now, I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. MOODY. Is that amendment accepted?
Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir; I accept it.
Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.
The SPEAKER. The amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MITCHELL] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows: Strike out, in lines 31 and 32, page 3, after the word "not," the following: "Expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale".

"Expressly assumed in their contract of purchase a And insert:
"Legally chargeable against said old corporation;"

So as to read:
"But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not legally chargeable against said old corporation."

Mr. POWERS. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not been able to obtain a copy of this bill. I wish to ask whether it contains any provision for the protection of persons who bought lands from the original company in the event their title should fail. Is there any provision for the protection of persons who now hold lands under contract from the old company? Mr. POWERS.

The bill leaves any creditor of the old corporation with all the legal rights that he now has. We do not under-tion with all the legal rights that he now has. We do not undertake to legislate here in behalf of creditors or against them.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not speaking of creditors, but of persons holding lands under warranty deeds or under land contracts.

Mr. POWERS. This does not interfere with any obligation (including warranty) which may have been assumed by the former corporation. All such obligations remain intact. The bill does not effect them at all corporation. All such obligations remain intact. The bill does not affect them at all.

Mr. BRUMM. As a matter of information, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Under the original incorporation there were, I presume, land grants from the Government. The original company evidently sold some of those lands.

Mr. POWERS. I have already answered the point that the gentleman is evidently coming to. If he will look at the report of the Commissioner of Railroads he will see—

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman undertakes to anticipate my inquiry; he may not do so correctly. I say the original company evidently sold some of the lands embraced in their land grants. When the mortgage was foreclosed, was not the title of individuals holding such lands wiped out by the sale under the mortgage?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman means their rights under the warranty.

Mr. BRUMM. I do not care whether we call it warranty or title.
Mr. TAWNEY. The title would not be wiped out.
Mr. BRUMM. It would be if the interest of the mortgagee had vested before the land was sold.

Mr. IAWNEI. The title would not be wiped out.

Mr. BRUMM. It would be if the interest of the mortgagee had vested before the land was sold.

Mr. POWERS. I do not quite understand the suggestion of my friend from Pennsylvania. But I will state to him that we could not, by any act of legislation here, destroy the vested rights of the purchasers of the land. Those who purchased the land investment of their money—we should see to it (1) that no relief.

from the company in the first instance we could not cut out of their rights even if we so desired. But there is no such proposi-

mr. BRUMM. I think we can make a condition that the land grant originally awarded to this corporation, and sold by them to bona fide purchasers, shall not be reinvested in the hands of this new corporation.

Mr. POWERS. That is expressly provided against. Let me call the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania to the last provision of the bill, which reads:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as making any additional grant of lands or other franchises to such successor corporation, or as a waiver of any rights of the United States now existing to enforce any forfeiture of lands heretofore granted to the said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, or as in any manner affecting the vested rights of any settler or settlers on any of the lands heretofore granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company or of any purchaser or purchasers of said lands from said company.

Mr. BRUMM. Then the rights that have already vested under the previous corporation are to be protected. If that is the intent and meaning of the clause, that answers the proposition.

Mr. POWERS. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. KNOX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POWERS. I dislike to refuse, but I do not propose to have my time exhausted in catechism. I will answer any question with respect to the bill, but prefer for the present to reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, as a general proposition I am opposed to the granting of Federal charters at all. I think such should be done by the States. In this case it does not appear to me that there is any necessity for it. Beyond all question the bill as presented should not pass unless amended in several particulars.

as presented should not pass unless amended in several particulars. The original act of July 27, 1866, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company 42,000,000 acres of land, and authorized 175 private individuals, named in the granting act, scattered all the way from Maine to California, upon the conditions that they should build something over 2,000 miles of railroad from Springfield, Mo., to the Pacific Ocean, before July 4, 1878. That is to say, that before the title finally passed from the Government this construction was to be fully completed. Within the time fixed by the granting act for the completion of the entire road they built only 125 miles of it. They came to Congress and asked Congress to give them the right to mortgage the road. That authority brought them no money. They then asked and obtained authority to mortgage the lands, franchises, privileges, and other rights and property. They executed the mortgages, but, as I have said, they completed only 125 miles of the road within the time fixed in the granting act. the granting act.

The mortgagees deliberately, with the full knowledge of the terms of the grant as to the time prescribed for the completion of the road, made the mortgages due at a later day. There was inserted in the act authorizing the mortgage a provision that any forfeiture should extend only to as much thereof as shall be coterminous with or appertain to that part of said road which shall have been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said morthave been constructed at the time of the foreclosure of said mortgage. These mortagees, at every meeting of the committee when the forfeiture bill was being considered, and when Congress sought to forfeit the grant, contended that Congress had no authority to do so under the law. The act of July 6, 1886, was passed with the understanding that it would restore to the public domain 10,795,480 acres of land. And yet in the face of the record they have made, after they have violated every condition imposed on them by the granting act, they still deny the power to forfeit. Congress on the 6th day of July, 1886, declared a forfeiture of all lands adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the road at that time, and attempted in this manner to exercise its sovereign right and power to restore to the public domain something over 10,000,000 acres of the lands granted. These mortgagees and this faithless corporation in the courts of law have something over 10,000,000 acres of the lands granted. These mortgagees and this faithless corporation in the courts of law have ever since been fighting the Government and the settlers, and are to-day contesting in the Supreme Court of the United States for these lands upon the same old contention that the Congress of the United States had no authority to declare the forfeiture. And yet the mortgagees of this corporation come to us with its record of broken relative and select that we give them they are single-to-select them. broken pledges and asks that we give them the same rights and powers and privileges granted by the grant of July 27, 1866. Thirty years have elapsed since the grant was made, and yet more than one-half of the road is unconstructed, the corporation bankrupted and now in the hands of a receiver, being unable to pay interest on its bonds. Across the great Mojave desert, where it was expected that by this grant we would secure railroad facilities, no road has yet been constructed, and there is but little.

is given to the men who acquired this charter and afterwards violated every promise made by them and broke every condition imposed upon them by the grant; (2) that the terms of the forfeit-ure act of July 6, 1886, shall be first accepted by the new corpora-tion as a condition precedent, and that this act shall not take effect until they reconvey the lands thus forfeited; (3) that the settlers shall have the lands which have been earned and not sold at the minimum Government price of $1.25 per acre, and those who have purchased fully protected in their titles; (4) that the bona fide debts due for work, labor, material, etc., shall be paid, and (5) the stock should be limited to the actual value of the road, so as to prevent the watering of the stock, and that the interest shall not exceed 4 per cent. The substitute which I have offered will secure all of this. If it is not adopted, I hope amendments will be that will secure the same things.

Mr. Speaker, shall we, by breathing into this corporation a new life, permit it to repudiate the honest debts of those who have performed labor for it? I have provided that all the debts, except those due to the old Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and to the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad companies, shall be paid. As for these railroad corporations who have wrecked the Atlantic and Pacific and themselves, and reorganized, I have no concern. They have second mortgages, and as they have been relieved of the payment of a part of their debts by similar reorganizations. So, if Congress sees fit to give the Atlantic and Pacific relief against them, I have no objection, but as to the laborer and the mechanic, and those who have legitimate claims growing out of mechanic, and those who have legitimate claims growing out of the operation of the road, I say it would be legalized repudiation to permit these mortgage creditors to defeat the payment of their debts or be preferred to them, even though they may have originally invested their money in good faith. So I have endeavored to provide for the protection of these men.

I think that the settlers along the line of the road should be protected in their purchases already made, and also by reducing the price for which these lands may be sold, so that the price shall be no more than the Government price. These lands have been withheld from settlement for thirty years. The act of forfeiture of 1886 reduced the Government price of land along this grant to $1.25 an acre, and I think the railroad lands should not exceed that sum. Let us say to this corporation, "If you are to be reorthat sum. Let us say to this corporation, "If you are to be reorganized under authority from Congress, you shall first accept as a condition precedent the terms imposed by the forfeiture act of 1886; and you shall sell the lands you have earned or acquired to actual settlers at the price at which the Government sells its public lands;" and further, that purchasers shall be protected, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] suggested a moment ago, as to sales already made.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? Mr. McRAE. Certainly.
Mr. POWERS. I wish to say to the gentleman that if he has any amendment providing that the land shall be sold at $1.25 an acre, it will be entirely acceptable, for you can not sell them for 50 cents an acre.
Mr. GROUT. All that have been sold so far have brought only 50 cents an acre. Vote for my substitute and you will get it. Mr. McRAE. you will not do that, then perfect the bill in that respect. should there be any objection to my proposition to limit the stock to be issued by this company as reorganized to the actual amount due upon mortgages and other just indebtedness such as that provided for by section 4 of my substitute? Why should we give this new corporation authority from the Congress of the United States to do what the old one did, water its stock and enrich its stockholders at the expense of the Government and people? The old incorporators contributed nothing to the building of this road. These do not propose to contribute anything to it. I question whether the old set honestly and in good faith appropriated the money they borrowed from the bondholders. The most that ought under any circumstances to be done is to protect the honest bonded debt; but so far as the outstanding stock is concerned, I appeal to Congress to study the history of this grant before authorizing a reissue of any part of it with a charter to go forth and rob shippers and settlers. We should also provide for a low rate of interest upon the bonds and stock, say not exceeding 4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I propose the substitute which I send to the Clerk's should there be any objection to my proposition to limit the stock est upon the bonds and stock, say not exceeding 4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I propose the substitute which I send to the Clerk's desk, and I ask that it be now read. It embodies every provision that I have referred to, and will, I think, protect every valid interest involved. While I dislike to vote for a charter to reorganize or to organize a Federal corporation by authority of the Congress of the United States, I am willing to do so in this case if gentlemen will accept these conditions; but I want it understood that the forfeiture which was declared ten years ago must be made a condition precedent to the reorganization. They shall not, with my consent, stand in one branch of this Government denying the right of Congress to make a forfeiture, and in the other ing the right of Congress to make a forfeiture, and in the other branch asking permission from Congress to live. I ask the Clerk to read the substitute which I now offer for the bill and amendments. The Clerk read as follows: '

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker— Mr. POWERS. Now, Mr. Speaker— Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the floor. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas. Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker—

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the gentleman proceeds, if he will allow me, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he will permit me to introduce the legislative bill, that it may be printed and referred.

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 9643) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, this proposed substitute is identical in many respects with the resolution passed by the House and reported from the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session for the reorganization of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Except as to the condition as to the forfeiture act, the price of Except as to the condition as to the forfeiture act, the price of land, and the limitations upon the issue of stock to be issued and the interest on it, I think it is identical. I do not understand why we should give the Atlantic and Pacific any greater privileges in the matter of a reorganization than we did the Northern Pacific. The debts provided for are those which the courts usually direct receivers to consider as preferred claims. The bill, unless amended, would not in the power of the pew corporation the right to deny would put in the power of the new corporation the right to deny the payment of them. Although the gentleman who presents this bill talks very long and loud about the righteousness of the bondholders' claims, he has not said anything about these small debts that may be due to laborers and employees of the railroads, and whose rights should be sacred with us.

Mr. HARRISON. Why take that power from the courts and embody it in this act?

Mr. McRAE. Because these mortgagees have come here and ask to be taken out of court by a new scheme of reorganization which involves the repudiation of some debts due from the old Mr. HARRISON. Can the court give them power to exist as a orporation?

Mr. McRAE. But when we give them the right to exist and be a corporation and grant them all the rights of the old corporation we should give them that power with the emphatic declaration that they shall pay their laborers and other debts for improving and operating the road, and that they can not have it until ing and operating the road, and that they can not have it until they do pay them.

Mr. HARRISON. Would not the courts protect them anyway?

Mr. McRAE. The courts can not protect them when we say in this bill, which permits them to be organized, that they shall not be held liable for any debts "not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale."

Mr. HARRISON. I understand an amendment has been offered and adopted legally only requiring them to assume the debts that they legally assume on the sale.

Mr. McRAE. I do not know of any amendment that has been adopted. We have not yet closed debate. Here is what the act says:

But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him and ask that the Clerk be allowed to read an amendment which I have offered, and which has been accepted, which substitutes the words "legally chargeable against said old corporation" for the words "expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale." This amendment cures the defect he refers to.

Mr. McRAE. I do not care to have it read in my time. The gentleman can have it read in his. If he wants to protect this class of debts, I suggest that he should join us in the effort to put the protection in the charter. If you want the laboring men and honest creditors of the old concern protected, put it into the act and leave nothing to construction. Almost this entire grant act and leave nothing to construction. Almost this entire grant has been lost to the people by construction.

Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with this grant and the efforts to forfeit it, and I say to you that the history of the corporation for thirty years has been that of broken pledges and an effort to get all it could and give as little return as possible to the people. Now, I yield ten minutes to my colleague, Judge Terry.

Mr. TERRY. I desire to send up an amendment and wish it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas presents the following amendment. The Chair thinks there are quite a number of amendments pending which ought to be disposed of before any more are considered.

Mr. TERRY. I want it read and considered pending, to be voted on at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "sale," in line 28, page 3, the following:
"But such new company shall be subject to all the obligations and debts to which said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was subject under its charter or act of incorporation, and nothing in this act shall be held to deprive the United States of any right or remedy they may at any time have had against said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company."

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to what is the real effect of this bill reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads. It in effect gives the purchasers by sale all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the old company, and does not impose upon the new company a single one of the obligations of the old company either to the Government of the United States or to envelope the obligations of the old company either to the Government of the United States or to anybody else.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment? I can relieve my friend, although the House would be greatly entertained by hearing him. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. TERRY. That is all right. I am glad you are in that frame of mind; but I do not propose to be cut off by what you may accept at the present time. [Laughter.] Now, let us look at the bill. It is not often that a man can get the floor, but when he does he does not want to be shut off by such an offer of concession as that made by my friend from Vermont. Here is the provision of the original bill:

Shall constitute a new company, which shall be entitled to hold and possess.

Shall constitute a new company, which shall be entitled to hold and possess the franchises and property so sold and to exercise the same rights, powers, privileges, grants, and franchises, including the franchise to be a corporation, granted by the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866.

Not a word said about any of its obligations, or its debts, or its

Now, I want to call the attention of this House to the very words of the section in the original charter, which the people of the United States have an interest in:

SEC 20. And be it further enacted, That to better accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interests and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph lines and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times, particularly in times of war, the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard to the rights of said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Now, I want this charter of this new company to be subject to the same kind of restrictions or provisions for the benefit or in behalf of the people of the United States. And yet, Mr. Speaker, we have the astonishing spectacle of an officer of the United States Government, who it is said has examined this measure, allowing to go unprotected the rights of the United States and recommending to this House a bill that does not protect a single one of these important rights.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. TERRY. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. If the gentleman will take the trouble to look at the bill, he will find that section 2 reads as follows:

That Congress at all times shall have power to alter, amend, or repeal this

Mr. TERRY. Yes, sir; but there is no provision with the same power and strength of language as that contained in section 20 of the existing law, and I want that preserved, and I want the right of the United States to regulate the rates of transportation of Government troops, supplies, etc., preserved. It is true that the gentleman has made a concession upon that point, but that is a matter to be passed on by the House, and I would rather have the amendment in the language that I have proposed. I have called the attention of the House to these matters to show how this bill was brought in originally with a certificate by a Government officer that the rights of the Government would be perfectly protected under it. It may be, sir, that it is considered by such officials that the Government of the United States, whilst it may have rights against individuals, has none against such a corporation as this. It simply shows the representatives of the people how carefully they must scan legislation of this kind.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I say that this House ought not to pass this bill in any haste. I have presented the suggestions that have occurred to me, and I also recommend to every Representative here who desires to protect the people of the United States to examine this bill carefully and see to it that it is not railroaded through here at the speed that is proposed.

One other thing: Another part of the bill proposes to relieve the ine this bill carefully and see to it that it is not railroaded through here at the speed that is proposed.

One other thing: Another part of the bill proposes to relieve the new company from existing debts and claims. As suggested by my colleague [Mr. McRae], it is usual for the courts in appointing receivers to provide that certain debts shall be preferred and shall be a lien upon the property, and that provision is contained in the substitute of my colleague. In some instances the courts appointing receivers have not put such a provision in their orders, and where the courts have failed to protect the rights of the people I think the Congress of the United States ought to step in and do what the courts have failed to do. The courts failed to protect the rights of the people in the order appointing a receiver for the Northern Pacific Railroad, and we stepped in and tried to do it. Let us step in here and try to protect them in this case. I do not know whether the court did its duty in the matter or not, but if it did this provision will not do any harm.

know whether the court did its duty in the matter or not, but if it did this provision will not do any harm.

I yield back the time to my colleague [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cooke].

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if it is in order to offer an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Arkansas?

The SPEAKER. The substitute can be amended, but the vote must be taken first on the original bill.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cooke] is entirely satisfactory to me, and if the House will consent, I am willing that it shall become a part of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. It can be accepted only by the House.

Mr. McRAE. I say that if the House will consent I am willing that it shall be made a part of the substitute that it shall be made a part of the substitute.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I ask that the amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, which will be pending. The amendment was read, as follows:

In section 1 of the substitute, after the words "shall relinquish in writing," insert the following: "and convey to the United States, by a proper deed or instrument, to be illed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior within six months after the passage of this act, and before this act shall take effect."

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEWAN].

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment that I wish to offer is for the purpose—

The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the original bill?

Mr. McEWAN. It is an amendment striking out from the bill. all that relates to releasing this proposed purchaser from debts and claims

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that amendments would not be in order under the rule until the pending amendments are disposed of.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I have watched the matter closely, and I submit that there is but one amendment to that particular part of this bill.

The SPEAKER. There can be only one amendment pending

The SPEAKER. All the others have been accepted.

Mr. McEWAN. All the others have been accepted by the House. They have been accepted by the proposer of the bill; but that is not a binding acceptance until the House ratifies it.

Mr. McEWAN. I ask that my amendment be considered as

The SPEAKER. That can not be done, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McEWAN. Then I ask unanimous consent.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that his amendment be considered as pending, to be taken up in its regular order.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas has kindly yielded me one minute, and I use it merely to say that if the payment of wages for labor be now protected by the courts and given a lien superior to this mortgage, then it is not becoming on the part of Congress to change that law in this respect and to impose a greater burden upon labor then it now become on the part of Congress to change that law in this respect and to impose a greater burden upon labor than it now bears by ordering the courts in their decree not to include unpaid wages. If labor be not protected by law, then certainly there is no occasion for the insertion of the provision in the bill, for then the law will operate to relieve the purchasers from the payment of wages. So, either way, this clause of the bill ought to be stricken out— I mean the words beginning in line 29 and extending down to line 32:

But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims on contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time. The SPEAKER. The question will now be taken on the amendments as they will be read by the Clerk. The first amendment to be voted on is that of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Add as a new section the following:
"Sec. 3. Where the line of such railway is now located within the limits of any State, or where such line is now located within a Territory which may hereafter become a State, such State, or such Territory when it shall become a State, shall be empowered to require such corporation to become incorporated within such State or States as may be provided by the laws thereof."

Mr. POWERS. There is no objection to that amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment (offered by Mr. MOODY) was read, as fol-

Amend by striking out from the word "Provided," on page 2, line 32, to the word "value," on page 3, line 41, and inserting the following:

"The capital stock of the corporation herein authorized shall be divided into shares each of the par value of $100, and shall not exceed the amount of the mortgage debt due and unpaid at the time of the decree of foreclosure; Provided, That additional stock and bonds may be issued by the corporation upon the payment into its treasury therefor the full par value thereof in cash. No stock shall be issued until the Secretary of the Interior shall approve its issue and certify that it is issued in conformity to the provisions of this act. The total stock issued under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $100,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment (offered by Mr. MITCHELL) was read, as follows:

Strike out after the word "not," in line 31, page 2, the following: "Expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale;" and inserts "Legally chargeable against said old corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. POWERS. I now call for the previous question.
Mr. TERRY. I have an amendment pending.
Mr. POWERS. I believe the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] desires to offer an amendment.
Mr. TERRY. I have an amendment pending.
The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the substitute or to the

Mr. TERRY. It is an amendment to the original bill, which I understand we have a right to perfect before the vote is taken on the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The Clerk will report the amend-ment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Terry].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "sale," in line 28, page 3, the following:
"But such new company shall be subject to all the obligations and duties to which said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was subject under its charter or act of incorporation; and nothing in this act shall be held to deprive the United States of any right or remedy they may at any time have had against said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There is another amendment—that of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEwan]—which the Clerk will read. This amendment is pending by order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words after the word "sale," in line 28, page 2, down to and including the word "sale," in line 32, page 2:

"But nothing in this act shall make such purchasers and their associates or such new corporation liable for any debts or claims or contracts of the old corporation not expressly assumed in their contract of purchase at said judicial sale."

Mr. POWERS. The whole object of this amendment has been accomplished by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MITCHELL]. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. McEWAN. I disagree with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers]. The intent of my amendment has not been accomplished. The purpose of that amendment is to remit this whole matter to the courts, in order that it may be decided in accordance with the law as it now stands. My amendment will strike from the bill all reference to existing debts or claims, and will leave that whole matter to be decided by the courts in accordance with the law. My hope is that the courts will find some way to enforce the payment of wages.

There must be some purpose in putting into the bill the words which I propose to strike out. That purpose must be to change existing law. If the words do not change existing law, they are superfluous; and if they do, they should not be in this bill. If the House wishes to be safe in this matter, it ought to adopt my amendment striking out those words, and allow the courts to decide the ment striking out those words, and allow the courts to decide the whole question in accordance with the present law. Let the courts determine whether the debts incurred for labor should or should not be paid under the law as it now stands. I am quite certain that my purpose was not accomplished by the other amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the gentleman how the courts can enforce anything that is not legally enforceable? The amendment proposed by me and already adopted makes all claims which are legally chargeable against the old corporation binding upon the new corporation. If the gentleman has in view debts which can not be enforced in the courts, I presume we do not wish to enforce their collection. I believe the aforesaid amendment will absolutely protect the wage earners, and it was for their protection. absolutely protect the wage earners, and it was for their protection and the protection of other similar creditors that I offered the amendment taking away from the reorganized company the power to assume or not, as they elected, the debts of the old company. Mr. McEWAN. In answer to the gentleman, I would say that

Mr. McEWAN. In answer to the gentleman, I would say that if the House wants to accomplish the apparent purpose of the gentleman from New York it will undoubtedly accomplish that purpose and my own in a better way by leaving out all reference to debts and claims and contracts. There is no doubt about that. If it be for the purpose of having something put before the court to be construed, all right; have it as the gentleman from New York has it. But if you want to say to the court, "Construe it recording to the statutes on the statute book or in case there is according to the statutes on the statute book, or, in case there is no statute, then according to the common law," that is a different question. The best way to accomplish the gentleman's purpose, if that is what he wants, is to strike out all the words to which I have referred.

Mr. POWERS. The import of my friend's suggestion is that you instruct the court how they shall decide a question. Now, it seems to me that we had better leave it to the court and not hamper them by saying, "You must decide so and so."

Mr. McEWAN. Let me ask the gentleman: Is this a new law so far as the debts and claims involved are concerned?

Mr. POWERS. Not at all. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Fosdick vs. Schall, have preserved all the rights of laborers on railroads, in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Waite, and which has been confirmed a half dozen times since. There is no trouble about that, as far as their protection is concerned.

Mr. McEWAN. Then the gentleman quite agrees with me in my assertion that there is no reason for these words appearing in

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have the amendment and that portion of the bill read.

The amendment proposed by Mr. McEwan was again reported. The question being taken on the amendment, the House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.
Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be added to the first section of the bill.
The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further. That in every case of failure of the title to any lands conveyed or contracted to be sold by said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, any and all rights of such purchaser or his assigns, in respect of such land, or in respect of the failure of such title, or in respect to the liability of said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company on said contracts for the sale of lands, shall survive and may be enforced against such successor company with the same force and effect and in the same manner as against the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company; and such successor company, upon making compensation for such loss of title or failure to comply with the conditions of such land contracts, shall be subrogated to the rights of such purchaser in respect of the lands for which such compensation shall have been made,

Mr. POWERS. That amendment is entirely acceptable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment procosed to the substitute, by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE].

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute as amended. The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute as amended. Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I think the House has perfected the bill so that there is no need for the substitute, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. McRAE. On the adoption of the substitute, Mr. Speaker, demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 71, nays 163, not voting 121; as follows: YEAS-71.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.
The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House, and did he fail to hear his name?
Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not hear my name called.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House at the time his name should have been called?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not know whether I was or not. I came out of the barber shop while the roll was being called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the gentleman's statement the Chair can not entertain the request.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For this day:

Mr. Grosvenor with Mr. Sulzer. Mr. Henderson with Mr. McMillin. Mr. Loudenslager with Mr. Livingston.

Mr. Hill with Mr. Stallings.
Mr. Lewis with Mr. Robertson of Louisiana.
Mr. Reyburn with Mr. Wheeler.
Mr. Smith of Michigan with Mr. Tucker.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the first section of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
Mr. POWERS. I believe the previous question has been ordered.
Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I did not understand that the previous question had been ordered. question had been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. POWERS. I moved it, and I supposed it was ordered by the House. No objection was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

After section I insert:

"Provided further, That as a condition precedent to reorganization the purchasers of the railroad property and their associates shall relinquish in writing and convey to the United States (by a proper deed or instrument to be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior within six months after the passage of this act and before the act shall take effect) all claim, right, title, and interest to all lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company embraced within both the granted and indemnity limits which were adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the road on the 6th day of July, 1886."

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in support of the amendment I would say that I understand there are millions of acres of ment, I would say that I understand there are millions of acres of unearned land grants involved here; that the original company has neglected to complete the road in accordance with its original charter; that it has not earned the land grants, and that there is litigation pending concerning it. Yet the purchasers are here asking us practically to give a new charter, to give them a standing whereby they may claim this unearned land to the extent of millions of acres. It seems to me only a wise and proper precaution to require them to relinquish that land grant upon those portions of the road which have been practically abandoned by the old corporation, and that the purchasers under the foreclosure should poration, and that the purchasers under the foreclosure should not and could not acquire any equitable right to such unearned grants. They at least ought to drop that much.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Powers] is recognized.

Mr. POWERS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.
Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois why the act of Congress declaring a forfeiture of all unearned land grants coterminous with uncompleted portions of the railroad, which act is already a law—why that does not dispose of this whole question? this whole question?

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the act in question is an act which we shall simply be following and carrying into effect by the adoption of this amendment. Our action in adopting this amendment will be in entire consonance with the provision of law now in force, to which the gentleman has referred. There is every reason, in other words, to make our legislation in such a Simeral:

case as this entirely consistent with the existing law, which would them and has abandoned those portions of the road.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has already instituted a suit to declare a forfeiture of these very lands. The suit is now pending. It is being argued in the Supreme Court of the United States to-day, and it seems to me we should not undertake to blackmail this company as the condition upon which they shall have the right to organize into a corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cooke].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Cooke of Illinois) there were—ayes 78, noes 43.

Mr. POWERS. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered. The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recog-

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is entitled

Mr. QUIGG. Is not this committee entitled to have the report

The CHAIRMAN. Not unless some gentleman asks to have it read in his time for debate. The gentleman from California [Mr.

LOUD] is recognized.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped, after the discussion which has taken place with regard to this measure through the public press and through the correspondence addressed to members of this body, that we could approach its discussion here at least with calmness and consideration. I have felt regarding this measure as I feel regarding all measures coming before us, that if the House desires to pass this or any other bill it should have an opportunity to do so without factious obstruction by any member of this body.

Mr. Chairman, without assuming special credit to myself—because this bill does not originate with me alone—I have no hesitation in saying that this is, without exception, the most important measure that has been brought before this body and the most important without doubt that will be presented before it shall

Mr. QUIGG. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether, in view of the great importance of this bill, he will not consent at this time to have the report of the committee read for the information

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect and courtesy to the gentleman from New York, I hope he will endeavor to confine himself quietly to his seat until I shall have at least got started in the few remarks that I propose to submit. The gentleman will evidently have abundant time before this question comes to a vote to have that report—which I commend to his very careful consideration—read in his own time, if he so desires. Satisfied in the justice of our cause, we would be content to rest the case upon the calm judgment of any and all who will give it their thoughtful consideration. Meanwhile, I hope I may be permitted, even by the gentleman from New York, to pursue in my remarks the course that I have laid out for myself, and I shall cheerfully accord to him the same courtesy.

Mr. Chairman, many gentlemen here may assume, perhaps, that I have magnified the importance of this measure, but this measure received the commendation of the Post-Office Department ten years ago. The officers of that Department whose duty it is to carefully investigate the working of our postal system saw the gross abuses that had grown out of the laws of 1879 and 1885 and presented the question to Congress in 1887, and each year since that time they have begged and pleaded with Congress in no uncertain tones to give the administration of the Post-Office Department some relief. The abuse has so grown in magnitude of late years that even the President of the United States in his last message called attention President of the United States in his last message called attention to the grievous evil which confronts us in the handling and carriage of second-class mail matter. I hope the House will pardon me while I read a few words from the report of the present Postmaster-General, a gentleman who has given this matter careful attention and study, aided and guided by the opinions of the officers who have gone before him for eight years. With that experience to draw upon, he took up the question and brought it down to the present time, and on page 6 of the report he uses this language.

So disheartening is it for the responsible head of the Department to see this waste of its earnings, with its resulting impairment of the efficiency of the postal service, its absorption of the fruits of good management and of careful economies, that but for the hope that Congress would enact the bill now on the House Calendar I should have taken the responsibility to modify and reverse the successive rulings through which this inroad on the service has been effected, and to exclude from the benefit of second-class rates the serial libraries and other publications not in the policy of the law, even if within the letter of its rather loose phraseology. This would have imposed upon those who profit at the public expense by existing practices the necessity of seeking through the courts or otherwise the restoration of their special privileges.

Man. Chairmann. I am sectioned that is the amount.

Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that if the present Postmaster-General had another year to serve he would carry into execution the purpose set forth in this part of his annual report. For my part I do not believe that it was ever intended by Congress that serial novels should pass through the mails at pound rates, a privi-lege originally vested in the newspapers of this country, and confined to them up to 1879, when by a ruling of the Attorney-General at that time, General Devens, it was held that a book issued in serial numbers was entitled to be carried at second-class rates under the rather loose phraseology of the law. With all due respect to the learning of the gentleman and to his honesty and integrity,

I think he erred, because in the advertisements of these so-called serials throughout the land even to-day they are not referred to as serial publications, but in their proper sphere, as books, and books alone.

We all admit that this country is to-day in an unfortunate condition financially. While perhaps we may not all agree as to the remedy for the cure of the existing evil, we do all admit that from a financial standpoint this country is in an unfortunate position. Now, this bill presents to this body the opportunity to relieve the country from a deficiency of $10,000,000 already existing in the service of the Post-Office Department, and to give to it in addition a revenue of $10,000,000 more. At the lowest calculation there is involved in this bill a saving to the Government of $20,000,000 per annum, and if we may take the figures of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, acknowledged to be a good business man, and who was at that time in a position to know whereof he spoke—if we may take his estimate made in 1892, we must come to the conclusion that this iniquity—I will term it iniquity—costs our people more than $40,000,000 annually. That is not much money, genremedy for the cure of the existing evil, we do all admit that from a more than $40,000,000 annually. That is not much money, gentlemen, I am willing to admit, to us who deal with hundreds of millions as some people deal with dollars.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman state on what page of the Postmaster-General's report I can find the statement to which he has just referred?

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will find it on page 11 of our report. We have copied a portion of the report of Postmaster-General Wanamaker, in which he says:

It is stated that a single publisher in Maine sent through the mail in one year 1,600 tons of books. A number of publishers at certain seasons of the year issue a new book every week, and some of them mail 2 tons a day. There are probably 50,000 tons of so-called serials passing through the post-offices every year at a penny a pound.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman refers me to page 11 of his report— Mr. LOUD.

Mr. LOUD. Now, if the gentleman will allow me—
Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wanted to be correct in my understanding of the gentleman's statement. As I read the statement on the middle of the page referred to, it is that "there are probably 50,000 tons of so-called serials passing through the post-offices every year at a penny a pound, causing a million dollars per year"—$1,000,000, the gentleman will observe—"to be added to the deficit."

Mr. LOUD. Those figures-$1,000,000-as the gentleman can Mr. LOUD. Those figures—$1,000,000—as the gentleman can easily ascertain, are either an error of the Postmaster-General or a typographical error, because 50,000 tons of matter means 100,000,000 pounds, which would cost us for transportation alone $8,000,000, for which we receive in return but $1,000,000, and to that you must add handling, which is at least $4,000,000 more.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman called my attention to a certain page of his report. I have read the statement on that page, and have asked him to inform me whether the sum stated as the estimated deficit was meant to be $1,000,000 or $10,000,000.

estimated deficit was meant to be $1,000,000 or $10,000,000. The gentleman tells me now that the statement as printed is an error, and that it means $10,000,000. I merely desired to be informed whether I was correct in reading the gentleman's own record

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, this bill will be opposed upon sentimental and educational grounds. Before the debate on this question closes we shall hear of the great advantages derived from the transportation through the mails of these serial novels and sample copies. Now, I should like to put a question to this House—whether, admitting every statement that can be made in favor of the present system, this House would be willing to-day to vote for the next ten years a sum of money equaling $240,000,000 for educational purposes, and those educational purposes not within the control of Congress or anybody else. That is what you have done by your law in the last ten years. I say that the present system within the last ten years has cost this country $240,000,000, which has come by taxation from the sweat of the faces of the people of our whole land, and which has gone to support a few publishers of books and newspapers, or so-called newspapers.

Mr. FOOTE. Will the gentleman give us the figures?
Mr. LOUD. I will insert the figures in my remarks as they will appear in the Record; I dislike to take up time now in reading them. Beginning in 1887, when the second-class matter transmitted through the mails was 126,000,000 pounds a year, the amount has grown until in 1896 it is 296,000,000 pounds. Even during the depression of 1893-94—the most serious period this country has gone through for many years—second-class matter increased at the rate of 15 per cent a year, while first-class matter increased at the rate of 2½ per cent a year. Postmasters-General for years have been prophesying that within a year, or two years at the furthest, there would be no deficiency in the Post-Office at the furthest, there would be no deliciency in the Post-Omce Department. Permit me to say, with due respect to them, that they have been chasing a phantom. Let us see what the estimated deficiencies have been and what the actual deficiencies are. In 1891 the estimated deficiency, in round numbers, was $5,500,000; the actual deficiency was $6,200,000. In 1892 the estimated deficiency was $3,978,000, and the actual deficiency was $5,503,793.

In 1893 there was an estimated deficiency of $1,500,000 and an actual deficiency of $5,177,000; and without going through with the table, which I will publish in full, I want to say, what the the table, which I will publish in full, I want to say, what the present Postmaster-General will sustain me in saying, that so long as our law remains as it is the receipts of the Post-Office Department never, by any possibility, can equal the expenditures.

For the convenience of members who wish to examine this matter in detail, I append at this point three tables, showing the weights and receipts from the several classes of mail matter, the estimated and actual deficiencies in the service, and the weight and amount of deficiency in transporting second-class matter.

The tables are as follows:

Weights and receipts of several classes of matter during 1996

To these deficiencies must be added the amounts earned by the Pacific railroads, which average about $1,700,000 a year.

To this should be added county free matter, which has averaged 50,000,000 pounds a year: also the cost of handling, which will amount to at least $75,000,000, making a total deficiency on transmission and handling second-class matter of $222,000,000. Adding 500,000,000 pounds of county free matter, at 4 cents a pound, $20,000,000 (a low estimate), and you have a grand total of $242,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes two reforms in the service of the Post-Office Department. While the bill covers four pages, there are but two propositions advanced in it that are of any vital concern to this House. This bill denies the right of admission to the mails, at second-class rates, of serial novels. That is to say, they are denied admission to the mails at the rate of 1 cent a pound. It costs the Government to transport and handle this class of mail matter at least 12 cents a pound.

A MEMBER At what rate would they go?

A MEMBER. At what rate would they go?

Mr. LOUD. They would go at the rate of any other book, I will say in answer to the gentleman; that is to say, the same rate that would be charged on any other book or publication of like character—8 cents a pound.

But some gentlemen, say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that the say to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that this is a bill so it now to be a second or say that the say to be a second or say that the say the say the say the say that the say the say the say that th

But some gentlemen say that this is a bill, as it now stands, in the interest of the express companies, and that we are driving this matter out of the hands of the Government to be carried by the express companies. I do not care. I do not care who does the business. If we can not do it successfully then it is our duty, I believe, to get out of it, and if anybody else can carry it profitably at less than 8 cents a pound I am perfectly willing that they shall have the entire business.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is making this condition more serious to the House is the fact that the Government of the United States is now getting all the long-haul matter, and the express companies, which some of our friends seem so much to fear, are getting the advantage of all the concentrations of weight and short-haul advantage of all the concentrations of weight and short-haul matter. Within a radius of 500 miles the express companies to-day are carrying the matter for a fraction under a cent a pound. Beyond the radius of 500 miles of course they dump it all on the United States Government for transportation.

I remember a little scene in the city of Chicago, threetwo or years ago, when there was a train load of second-class mail matter to be shipped to Boston. The express companies there, alive to business, wanted to get the transportation of the matter to its destination, and made a bid for that purpose. But the party desiring to send it said: "Why, we can do much better than that with the Government. The Government will carry it to Boston for 1 cent a pound. Why should we pay you more?" And the express companies asked Mr. Hesing, then and now the postmaster there, the question, "Can you afford to carry it to Boston for 1 cent a pound? We can not." He said: "But I would carry it to the North Pole, if there was a postal route there, under the laws of the Government, at that price." And, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, he would have been required to carry it to Circle City, Alaska, at the rate of 1 cent a pound, if there had been a route, although it would cost the Government $185 a pound for the although it would cost the Government $185 a pound for the

Mr. STEELE. A hundred and eighty-five dollars a pound!
Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir. We had a contract for carrying the mails there, which cost the Governmen $95 a pound; but the contractor could not afford to perform the service at that rate, and the contract was finally canceled and a new contract entered into at something like double, or more than double, the former rate.

The other provision in the bill denies to the newspapers of the The other provision in the bill denies to the newspapers of the country the sample-copy privilege which they have heretofore enjoyed. Now, there is the only serious objection that we are going to meet with on the floor of the House in regard to this bill. Some portion of the press of the country are not willing to surrender the sample-copy privilege which they now enjoy. I recognized this difficulty when the measure was brought before Congress. I knew that we must have, as we usually have in support of any other measure that is passed by this body, the support of the metropolitan press of the country. I know how members of Congress themselves are sometimes controlled, and that some of us even fear the great press of the country. Now, then, I want to say that the great press of the country have indorsed this measure from the first letter to the last. from the first letter to the last.

I remember meeting with the press association in New York a year ago. I remember how tenaciously they desired to hang on to the sample-copy privilege. But when the matter was presented to them, and the serious wrongs that the Government was suffer-ing from explained, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, be it said with credit and lasting honor to themselves, arose patriotically, and without the single exception of a man in the body, stated that they were willing to surrender the sample-copy privilege that they now enjoy in order that this loss might hereafter be prevented to the Government. Some of you perhaps do not know who compose the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. Let me say that this paper which I hold in my hand is a list of them, and that it embraces most all of the large daily newspapers published throughout the length and breadth of our country. Probably 95 per cent of the great daily newspapers—the great metropolitan journals of this country—have given their official indorsement to this in the following manner: tion, be it said with credit and lasting honor to themselves, arose

R. 4566) introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Loud, of California. "This approval is based particularly on its provisions excluding from the mails a class of printed matter not in any sense publications based upon a list of bona fide subscribers, but which is made to assume some of the characteristics of legitimate periodical publications for the purpose of securing the advantage of second-class postage.

Thomas, Lord & Thomas; F. B. White, Frank B. White Company.

I refer to this, Mr. Chairman, to ease the minds of some of my friends as to how the press of this country stand toward this measure. I know it will relieve the minds of some of us. The only class of papers that oppose this bill are those which, if I may be permitted to use the word, are criminally participants of this bounty.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LOUD. Certainly, for a question.

Mr. COX. I want to know how it happened that the copies of the bill and report were alone in your hands, when we could not get hold of them at all?

get hold of them at all?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, I will state that this bill has been reprinted twice or three times. The committee, under the rule of the House, had the right to print for its own use a number of copies of this bill and report, which we have harbored until the present time. That is all.

Mr. COX. I understand that the gentleman has harbored them until the discussion came up on his bill. I do not like that kind of harboring

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have harbored this for a day to come, and the day has come, and the bills are at the disposal of the members of the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. As I understand it, these are the committee's bills and the committee's copies of the report, and you extend tee's bills and the committee's copies of the report, and you extend the courtesy to the House of distributing them.

Mr. LOUD. That is all. There have been over 15,000 of these printed up to the present time.

Mr. COX. Who had them?

Mr. LOUD. There has been a great demand for them. There have been three reprints.

have been three reprints.

Mr. COX. I am very much inclined to favor your bill, but I should like to know where the harboring came in.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, probably a strenuous fight will be made on this floor to amend this bill in relation to sample copies, because that is the only method by which the illegitimate journals—and I term them so—can gain admission to the mails at second-class rates. I regard the sample-copy provision of this bill as of greater moment than the provision relating to the serial novel, because you can not anticipate the magnitude of the growth of this sample-copy abuse. Do you know how it is done? Let me read to you something, just to give you an insight into this abuse. I hold in my hand a paper assumed to have the largest circulation of any journal in the United States, and yet I will venture to say that there are not ten men in this House who ever heard of it. I refer to a paper called Comfort, which has a guaranteed circurefer to a paper called Comfort, which has a guaranteed circulation of 1,250,000 copies. How does it gain its circulation? I have in my hand a letter from an advertising agent at South Bend, Ind., in which he says:

In which he says:

Hon. Eugene F. Loud,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Appreciating your valuable efforts in bringing to time the fraudulent papers and periodicals, I take pleasure in mailing to you, under separate cover, four copies of that king of frauds, Comfort, published at Augusta, Me.

These four copies were all received in this morning's mail, and all to the same address.

Mr. OWNEYS.

same address.

Mr. OWENS. Cold comfort!

Mr. LOUD. Now, this is not the only one. There are thousands of them in the country that are published solely for advertising purposes. You will find in going through them many advertisements which read like this, "Send a postage stamp and you will learn something to your advantage," or something of that character. If you send a postage stamp, what do you learn? You got a conv of this paper, you have become a subscriber until the get a copy of this paper, you have become a subscriber until the resurrection morn, and that is the way they get their lists of subscribers.

Here is another sample letter that was given to me by a member of this House:

MAJESTIC MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
OFFICE AND FACTORY, Nos. 2014 TO 2020 MORGAN STREET,
St. Louis, December 9, 1896.
DEAR SIR: To give you a little idea of the workings of the Post-Office Department regarding newspaper matter, will say that this concern undertook to do some advertising in papers throughout the country nearly three years ago, most of which was discontinued a year ago. Notwithstanding in many instances we have written the papers two, three, and four times to stop sending us their copies, they daily pour in upon us at the rate of about 100 pounds per week, simply because the cost of sending them is nominal and it counts in their circulation.

We lay this matter before you in order that you may strengthen yourself in placing it before the proper department as an outrage on the Post-Office Department.

Department. Respectfully, yours,

MAJESTIC Mrg. Co., R. H. STOCKTON, Vice-President.

Hon. SETH COBB, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to ask the gentleman right here a question upon that particular point. Is it not true that the circulation of a newspaper is the guide by which it charges for advertising?
Mr. LOUD.

Mr. LOUD. Why, certainly.
Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And by representing the circulation in that way, where they send out copies gratuitously, they get their price from their advertisers.

Mr. LOUD. Certainly; the price of advertising is regulated by the circulation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And that is called circulation.
Mr. LOUD. That is called circulation. I do not know anything about this paper Comfort, but it is a much better paper than many of these others. It is first-class of this class of material; but I will venture to assert that Comfort has not a thousand bona fide subscribers in this country who voluntarily order and pay for the same, yet it has a circulation, sworn to, of 1,250,000 every issue.

the same, yet it has a circulation, sworn to, of 1,250,000 every issue.

Now, then, this bill does not take away from any newspaper in the country any right that it legitimately enjoys to-day, except the right of sending out sample copies. If the sample copy could be confined to its legitimate intent, I do not think your committee would have recommended striking off this sample-copy abuse; but let me say that the only means by which this class of journals can exist is through the sample-copy privilege.

Mr. HALL. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. LOUD. Let me illustrate. Here is an advertising journal seeking admission to the Post-Office Department's second-class privileges. Its nominal list of subscribers, of patrons, permit me to say, is 250—250 copies. It secures certain advertising and then circulates through "sample copies" as many as a million and a half or two million copies, an unlimited number, if you please, at the expense of the United States Government and the people. Now I yield to a question of my colleague. I yield to a question of my colleague.

Mr. HALL. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee if he can tell us what that copy of Comfort weighs?

Mr. LOUD. I have not weighed it.

Mr. HALL. Have you weighed it, that and some of the other periodicals, so as to estimate what it costs the United States Government to send that matter out?

Mr. LOUD. It will weigh about 2 ounces. I have not figured that out. I think the Postmaster-General has figured it out.

There is another phase of this case, Mr. Chairman—the book phase—that I do not care to refer to to-night. I expect as this debate proceeds to have my amiable friend from New York [Mr. QUIGG] present to you, as he did once before in this House, copies of Shakespeare and Dickens as representing this great class of serial novels that go through the mail now at pound rates. After the gentleman shall have taken that position, I will bring upon the floor of this House samples of books which I believe represent and I say so honestly-95 per cent of the class of serial novels sent through the mail, which you will find is not quite of the high class unrough the mail, which you will find is not quite of the high class and character that the gentleman will present on the other side. But I prefer leaving that portion until we shall have progressed further with the consideration of this bill; and I will not even present them then unless this question is presented on the other side. How much time have I used, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used thirty-seven min-

Mr. LOUD. If any gentleman desires to ask any question, I will be pleased to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would ask the gentleman having charge of the bill a question. The consideration of this legislation at this the bill a question. The consideration of this legislation at this time is somewhat of a surprise to myself, and I speak for myself, and to a number of gentlemen of the House. The gentleman now stands recognized, and under the rules of the House his bill is unfinished business, and this legislation, unless it is decided by a vote of the House to take up an appropriation bill, will stand for consideration until concluded. There are some gentlemen who desire to discuss this bill, I presume upon both sides of the proposition; and I would therefore suggest to the gentleman, as he does not lose his standing, that the House adjourn, so that gentlemen having data and matter that they desire to read or bring does not lose his standing, that the House adjourn, so that gentle-men having data and matter that they desire to read or bring together can have an opportunity to do so, unless some other gentleman desires to speak on the gentleman's own side. I am making this suggestion largely in the interest of gentlemen who have statements they desire to make. The gentleman does not lose anything either technically or parliamentarily.

Mr. LOUD. Of course, theoretically, "the gentleman" loses nothing; but let me explain to the House the position that the gentleman in charge of the bill and the bill is placed in on account of crowding out. You well understand, under the morning hour for the call of committees to present matters, this committee is liable to be placed in just the same position it was to-day. While it is unfinished business, it is true, every day until the close of this session, it may go so far that the committee may be recognized—and I want to emphasize that—to call this matter up at half past 2 or 3, or half past 3 o'clock, and still be subject to the inevitable hour and a half of filibustering—permit me to use that word, because I think it was filibustering—subject to the same hour and a half every day of filibustering, which brings us up close to the time of adjournment.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as I am concerned, I think this measure of so much importance that it should receive the fullest deliberation and discussion, now that it has got its standing in the House, and whatever may have been my votes with regard to it, they went tion and discussion, now that it has got its standing in the House, and whatever may have been my votes with regard to it, they went simply to the question of taking it up to-day. I would have voted with the gentleman to take it up to-morrow. I will vote with him at any time to take up for consideration legislation on this subject. I am simply asking him now that, unless some one desires to speak upon the bill this evening, he consent to let it go over until to-morrow. It is only about half an hour before the usual hour of adjournment. I will say to the gentleman further that there has been no fillingtoring on my next because I want that there has been no filibustering on my part, because I want this matter settled.

Mr. QUIGG. If the gentleman from California will permit me, I will say, so far as my part of the "filibustering" is concerned, that I do not desire to filibuster against this bill. I am perfectly willing that it shall come forward and be considered and disposed All I desired was that it should not come forward to-day. to-day. I knew that the gentleman from California was aiming to get a rule, and I should have been very glad to have had him get a rule. So far as I am concerned, I have received a vast mass of rule. So far as I am concerned, I have received a vast mass of papers in relation to this bill, and my desire for delay was simply to get an opportunity to study them during the evening. That was the only point I had in view, and if the gentleman will now consent to the proposition made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I assure him that, so far as I am concerned, there will be no effort made to delay the consideration of his bill from day to day.

Mr. LOUD. I should like very much to have this bill made a special order for to measure.

special order for to-morrow.

Mr. QUIGG. So should I.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman from California, in all frankness, that I have been instructed by the Appropriations Committee to bring up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill at the earliest practicable moment, so that I should be compelled to object to unanimous consent unless my committee should determine otherwise. I will further say to the should be compelled to object to unanimous consent unless my committee should determine otherwise. I will further say to the gentleman that I believe the legislative bill will be disposed of in a day or two days at the longest. The gentleman in charge of the military appropriation bill has informed me within a very few minutes that he thinks that bill will be disposed of in two hours. Now, as the House does not enter upon the holiday recess until Tuesday noon, and as there are no other appropriation bills on the Calendar, and I do not know of any purpose to bring any others forward before the holiday recess, the gentleman will evidently have several days for the consideration of his bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, let me make a brief statement to show the House the position into which gentlemen are forcing me. Thursday has been set aside for the business of the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Bingham] and the Military Committee propose to take to-morrow, and perhaps some other day during the week, for appropriation bills.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw all that I have said. Let the gentleman go on until the usual hour of ad-

Mr. LOUD (continuing). Friday is Private Calendar day, and almost everybody goes home toward the end of the week. It was not my purpose to ask the committee to proceed further with the consideration of this bill this evening unless some gentlemen on our side desired to speak.

A Member. Then let the committee rise now.

Mr. LOUD. I am perfectly willing to accept the gentleman's proposition, but, as I have said, I would like to have this bill made a special order. Let me say to the committee that this bill is not a matter of any special moment to me, but it is a matter of great importance to this Government. I believe that the passage of this bill will save us from fifteen to twenty million dollars a year, and there is no other proposition to make any such saving that can be brought before this House upon which we can hope for unanimity but this. Perhaps we shall not be compelled to pass a revenue measure. Perhaps we shall not have any revenue legislation. Perhaps we shall be saved from the necessity of the issuance of bonds on the eve of the incoming of our Republican Administration by the passage of this bill. This is a measure of such importance that I think it ought to be considered and passed upon even before the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the legislative appropriation bill; which might very well wait a few days a few days

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. LOUD. Does all this controversy and colloquy come out of my time? [Laughter.]

The motion of Mr. Loub was agreed to.

The committee accordingly reserved the Speaker having reserved.

ACCEPTANCE OF MEDALS AND TESTIMONIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back favorably five bills, all of them author-Relations to report back tavorably five bills, all of them authorizing officers of the United States to accept medals or testimonials from foreign governments. Such bills are always passed without objection and even without discussion. I will ask for their present consideration, if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio reports back and asks for the present consideration of sundry bills. The first bill reported will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2340) authorizing Herbert H. D.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3340) authorizing Herbert H. D. Pierce to accept a medal from the Russian Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a number of other bills of the same character, and I hardly think it is just to make a discrimi-same character, and I hardly think it is just to make a discrimination. I introduced a bill at the last session to authorize Passed Assistant Surgeon Kinyoun, of the Marine-Hospital Service, to accept a medal from the President of the Republic of Venezuela.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are five of these bills and all are reported favorably. I suppose the bill referred to by the Senator from Missouri is among them, if it has not been already reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been reported and is on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Ohio what were the services of this gentleman?

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that he was appointed to act on some state occasion, I think in connection with the coronation of the Czar, and a medal was bestowed upon him as a compliment. I do not think much of these things myself; I am generally opposed to this class of bills, but they have always passed the Senate. I do not know of a single exception. Therefore the committee reports them favorably.

Mr. HOAR. I think the bills had better go to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be read by title and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to enter an objection to the consideration of the bills at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed to their consideration, the bills will be read by title and placed on the

A bill (S. 3365) to authorize Commander E. S. Houston, United A bill (S. 3363) to authorize Commander E. S. Housen, or near States Navy, to accept a portrait of the Emperor of Germany;
A bill (S. 3363) to authorize C. E. Marr and E. H. Pierce to accept testimonials from the Canadian government;

Dr. George H. Penrose to accept certain testimonials from the Argentine Government; and

A bill (S. 3366) to authorize Admiral T. O. Selfridge, United States Navy; Capt. G. H. Wadleigh, United States Navy; Lieut. Commander E. H. Gheen, United States Navy; Paymaster J. B. Russell, United States Navy, to accept medals presented to them by the Passion geography.

them by the Russian government.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the bill which I inquired about is merely a formality. There was a piece of silver of no great value, except as a memorial of the occasion, given to a large number of Americans abroad who took some part as a committee with other committees in the matter of the coronation and one of them other committees in the matter of the coronation, and one of them happening to be a secretary of legation he hesitated about his right to accept it without the leave of Congress. So I will withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the objection was renewed by the Senator from Nebraska, and objection having been made, the bills will be placed on the Calendar.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 209) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1896, on the 18th day of said month, to report it without amendment, and I ask that it be put upon its passage. It is the usual joint resolution that is passed every year.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT LEXINGTON.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT LEXINGTON.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to amend the act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Lexington, Mo., and I ask for its present consideration. It is a mere formal matter to extend the time for constructing the bridge, and it is important that it should be passed now.

The bill (S. 3401) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.," approved July 26, 1894, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. BILLS INTRODUCED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, much has been said in laudation of the preference given to ex-Union soldiers and sailors of the civil war by section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the public generally, including many, perhaps, if not most, of the officers in the Government service, believe that all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors in the United that all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors in the United States service during the civil war are entitled to preference rights under the law and the civil-service rules. This is a mis-take, and the purpose of the bill I now present is to rectify such mistake.

Section 1754 of the Revised Statutes, act of March 3, 1865, provides as follows:

Persons discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

While section 2, Rule VII, of the civil-service rules provides that-The names of all competitors whose claims to preference under the provisions of section 1754 of the Revised Statutes have been allowed by the Commission, and who attain an average of 65 or over shall be placed in the order of their average percentages at the head of the proper register of the eligibles.

While section 3 of Rule VII provides as follows:

For filling vacancies in positions for which competitive tests are not practicable, persons who served in the military or naval service of the United States in the late war of the rebellion and were honorably discharged therefrom shall be placed at the head of the proper register in the order of their fulfillment of said requirements.

All this on its face would seem to mean very much and be all right, while, as a matter of fact, it means very little and is all wrong, except in so far as it goes, but it is too restricted in its application. Very few of the soldiers or sailors of the civil war who were honorably discharged thirty-odd years ago from the service of the United States by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, and it is only to this class the preference is given by existing law, are now living to take advantage of this act of 1865, while many of those who were honorably discharged at the close of the war, not by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, but by expiration of term of service, have since their discharge become disabled by reason of wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty and who are capable of performing the duties of any one of thousands of offices in the civil service, but are not capable of performing manual labor, and are not able to wrangle in competitive examinations with men of a generation later from the schools. This latter class comprises the surviving old soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and therefore it is that I propose by this amendment to existing law to provide that all honorably discharged officers and men, soldiers and sailors, of the late civil war who served ninety days or more during the war of the rebellion from the privileges conferred by section 1754 of the Revised Statutes, and also any privileges conferred on the class embraced in said section 1754 by sections 2 and 3 of Rule VII of the civil-service rules. If a preference is to be given to the veterans of the war of the rebellion, then let it be a preference in fact and not merely in name, and let this same preference be granted also to that other equally meritorious class, the grizzled veterans of Indian wars.

I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, where I trust it will receive favorable consideration and action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred as indicated.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of L. W. Huston, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads December 14, 1887, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

will be read for information.

Mr. HALE. Has the regular order of business been completed?

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of resolutions, concurrent and other, is in order.

REPORT ON IRRIGATION IN ARIZONA.

Mr. ALLEN. I have here a report on the irrigation investiga-tion for the benefit of the Pima and other Indians on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz., prepared by Mr. Arthur P. Davis, of the Geological Bureau. There has been no appropriation made for its publication. It is regarded by the Bureau as a paper of considerable importance, and being short and not requiring the expenditure of much money to publish it, I ask to have it printed as a miscellaneous document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the paper indicated by him be printed as mr. FRYE. What is the paper?

Mr. ALLEN. It is a report on an irrigation investigation for the benefit of the Pima and other Indians on the Gila River Indian Reservation, Ariz.
Mr. FRYE. I have no objection.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the pension appropriation bill be taken up. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9473) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before this bill is put on its passage (and I apprehend that there will be no opposition manifested to its passage), I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate a few minutes in some observations touching the matter of pension frauds.

Before doing so I want to put on record my appreciation of the present administration of the Pension Bureau and to say that in my judgment the man who is at the head of that great department of the Government at the present time is desirous not only of administering the laws in a generous and just spirit, but that his sympathies are with the men and the women who are asking for recognition because of the services of the brave men who periled their lives that this Government might live.

Now, as to pension frauds. I was very much surprised a few days ago in listening to the reading of the message of the President of the United States to find that that high official has not yet disabused his mind of the idea that the pensioners of this Government are men of rascally tendencies who are attempting in every possible way to obtain from the Treasury of the United States money that is not justly their due. I wish to read from the message of the President of the United States money that is not justly their due. sage of the President two or three paragraphs bearing upon this question. The President says:

question. The President says:

The diminution of our enormous pension roll and the decrease of pension expenditure, which have been so often confidently foretold, still fail in material realization. The number of pensioners on the rolls at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, was 970.678. This is the largest number ever reported. The amount paid exclusively for pensions during the year was $138.214.761.94. a slight decrease from that of the preceding year, while the total expenditures on account of pensions, including the cost of maintaining the department and expenses attending pension distribution, amounted to $142.206.550.59, or within a very small fraction of one-third of the entire expense of supporting the Government during the same year. The number of new pension certificates issued was 90,640. Of these, 40,374 represent original allowances of claims, and 15,878 increases of existing pensions.

The sum appropriated for the payment of pensions for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1897, is $140,000,000, and for the succeeding year it is estimated that the same amount will be necessary.

The Commissioner of Pensions reports that during the last fiscal year 339 indictments were found against violators of the pension laws. Upon these indictments 167 convictions resulted.

In my opinion-

Says the President-

Says the President—
based upon such statements as these and much other information and observation, the abuses which have been allowed to creep into our pension system have done incalculable harm in demoralizing our people and undermining good citizenship. I have endeavored within my sphere of official duty to protect our pension roll and make it what it should be, a roll of honor, containing the names of those disabled in their country's service and worthy of their country's affectionate remembrance. When I have seen those who pose as the soldiers' friends active and alert in urging greater laxity and more reckless pension expenditure, while nursing selfish schemes. I have deprecated the approach of a situation when necessary retrenchment and enforced economy may lead to an attack upon pension abuses so determined as to overlook the discrimination due to those who, worthy of a nation's care, ought to live and die under the projection of a nation's gratitude.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that the President of the United States calls attention to the fact that during the past fiscal United States calls attention to the fact that during the past fiscal year 339 indictments were found against violators of the pension laws. The President does not say, nor have I any data at hand to inform myself on that point, whether the indictments were found against soldiers or against pension attorneys.

Mr. HAWLEY. Or against witnesses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or against witnesses, as the Senator from Connecticut very properly observes. It is at least competent for me to conclude that all of these 339 indictments and 167 convictions have not been found against men or women who are drawing.

me to conclude that all of these 339 indictments and 167 convictions have not been found against men or women who are drawing pensions under the laws of the United States.

Bearing on this subject, I am pleased to turn to an editorial in the Washington Post of December 9, 1896, which discusses this question with so much fairness and ability that I desire to put it upon record pending the consideration of this bill. If the Washington Post, one of the great newspapers of this country, had never done anything more than to prick this bubble that the President is constantly obtruding upon Congress and the country as regards pension frauds it would deserve the gratitude of every lover of his country and of every supporter of the pension system of the United States. The editorial is as follows:

of the United States. The editorial is as follows:

The President, in his message, quotes from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions to show that during the last fiscal year 339 indictments were found "against the violators of the pension laws." "Upon these indictments," he says, "167 convictions resulted." Inasmuch as an indictment is not proof of guilt, it would have been more accurate to have said that 339 persons were indicted for alleged violations of the pension laws. They are not "violators" until convicted. The President, after citing those figures, remarks that in his opinion, "based upon such statements as these and much other information and observation, the abuses which have been allowed to creep into our pension system have done incalculable harm in demoralizing our people and undermining good citizenship."

There are $70.678 names on the pension roll, and the annual payments aggregate about $140.000.000. That some abuses have crept into the system is doubtless true, but the fact that only 167 persons were proven guilty last year will be accepted as convincing proof that these abuses are few and small as compared with rascalities that have frequently shown up in other departments of the public service. The number of convictions is about one-seventieth part of 1 per cent of the number of pensioners.

And that is upon the assumption that these convictions have all

And that is upon the assumption that these convictions have all been found against persons drawing pensions, and not against other parties who were interested in getting pension claims allowed, or as witnesses in pension cases.

And it should be borne in mind-

Continues the Post-

that the hunt for pension frauds during the last fiscal year was prosecuted with great vigor. The best detective talent and the most vigorous prosecution were given, and very properly so, to that work. All good citizens, including the pensioners and their comrades, believe that it is eminently politic to hunt down and punish violators of the pension laws, so that the roll may be kept, as it always has been, a roll of honor. And when the Administration, after a year of unremitting effort, backed by unlimited means, reports the conviction of only 167 frauds, and a disbursement of $140,000,000 to almost a million pensioners, the old soldiers and their friends point with pride to the Pension Bureau, and challenge comparison between that and other branches of the service which present possibilities of rascality.

We do not think the figures quoted by the President would convince an optimist that the abuses of the pension system have "demoralized our people" or "undermined good citizenship" to an alarming extent. There is not a church in the United States that would be surprised or feel disgraced if one-seventieth of 1 per cent of its membership were sent to the penitentiary in any one year. The Post-Office Department or the Treasury would not be shocked if such a fractional percentage of its employees proved dishonest. The fact is that the results of the long and strong hunt for pension frauds have strengthened the system in public confidence. The country does not regret but is proud of its generous treatment of the men who saved the Union from disruption. As to the Pension Bureau, it has, under the present Commissioner, ceased to be a political factor, and there is some reason to hope that its tranquillity may not again be disturbed by the wild waves of partisan strife and commotion.

Without giving my entire assent to the closing paragraph of Without giving my entire assent to the closing paragraph of that editorial, as I do not believe the Pension Bureau has ever been used for political purposes, I am satisfied, after having read it, to simply express my judgment upon this continuous and unjustifiable attack by the Executive of the United States upon the pensioners of this Government, and his iterated and reiterated assertion that the relief those who are drawing pensions is not a pensioners of this Government, and his iterated and reiterated assertion that the roll of those who are drawing pensions is not a roll of honor, and that there are rascalities and disgraces connected with it that are not to the credit of the men who fought for our Government and our flag. I am content to leave the discussion of the question at this point. I am sure that the Congress of the United States at least will never indores sentiments such as I have read from the annual message of the Chief Executive, but that Congress will to-day, as heretofore, stand by the soldiers in all their just rights and be willing to grant them what the Government solemnly pledged its honor to do for them when they enlisted under the banner of our flag and our Constitution in the Government solemnly pledged its honor to do for them when they enlisted under the banner of our flag and our Constitution in the matter of providing liberally for them and their dependent ones.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I have not attempted to make a careful estimate of the figures in the case, but in finding a percentage of corruption in this matter not only the 900,000 pensioners should be counted, but the two or three witnesses in each case, claim agents, and all who are involved in it. They are among the persons against whom indictments might be found. The total number among whom the conviction of 167 persons should be disnumber among whom the conviction of 167 persons should be distributed is probably not less than 2,000,000. If out of 2,000,000 people who either draw pensions or have been witnesses or agents only 167 have been convicted after very diligent search and prose-
